PELLETIER AND COAKLEY FACE GRAND JURY PROBE

ALLEN CALLS SPECIAL SESSION TO ACT ON CASES AUG. 28

The unusual spectacle of the Attorney-General of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts appearing in person before a Grand Jury especially called for the purpose of considering indictments against lawyers, ex-district attorneys, bankers and politicians is scheduled for Monday, August 28.

At that time Attorney-General J. Weston Allen wil go before his special body of men and ask them to consider, among others, the cases of:

Former District Attorney and present candidate for that office, Joseph C. Pelletier.

Daniel H. Coakley, former attorney at the bar, recently disbarred by the Supreme Court.

Former District Attorney Nathan A. Tufts, also disbarred and dislodged from office.

Former District Attorney William J. Corcoran, whose confession concerning graft and bribery led to the disbarment of the above men.

The charge has been made by the above-mentioned and others that the action of Mr. Allen is a grandstand play to carry his name before the people in connection with his present candidacy for the Republican nomination for Governor of this State. Mr. Allen is silent.

However, it was he who brought all of the actions for disbarment leading up to the coming Grand Jury action.

Consequently, his friends contend that he is simply following the line of duty such as animated former District Attorney Jerome of New York, and former District Attorney Joseph W. Folk of St. Louis.

ALLEN'S INVESTIGATIONS.

In announcing the court's order today, Attorney General Allen made public the letter he sent to Chief Justice Hall requesting a special grand jury and indicating the scope of his inquiry.

"For some time," says the letter in part "my department, on report from the Commissioner of Banks that, in his opinion, officers of some of the banks of which he took possession had violated the banking and other laws of the Commonwealth, has been making an investigation based on his report.

"As a result of my investigation I

McAnarney in behalf of the wife, she announced that the petition was filed through a misunderstanding.

"I sought the advice of my lawyer, but didn't authorize any legal steps," she said. "It was all a misunderstanding and our difficulties will be straightened out of court."

SAY DOGS ENDANGER LIVES

Revere Men Ask Court Compel Woman to Restrain "Ferocious Beasts"

The heart of darkest Africa, with its lions, tigers and other beasts of prey, is a safe and pleasant Summer resort compared to Revere, according to five residents of that city who today filed a bill in equity in the Superior Court.

According to these men Revere is overrun by large, ferocious, ever-bearing dogs, who jeopardize the life of every resident of the city and force citizens to arm themselves with clubs.

The bill was brought by Justin W. Rich, Willis Cooper, William A. Sweeney, Maurice E. Rich and Charles H. White, against James H. Hurley, Margaret M. Wiseman and Ellen Wiseman, all of No. 40 Walnut park, Revere.

It seeks to enjoin them from harboring several alleged large and ferocious dogs, which not only endanger the lives of the neighbors, but keep them awake nights, according to the allegation.

The petitioners declare that on July 3 the Department of Animal Industries examined one of these dogs and ordered it quarantined on suspicion of having rabies. During the past year it is alleged from five to fifteen dogs have been kept by the defendants, and at the present time there are a large number there.

The dogs, it is claimed, have bitten more than a dozen persons. Timid women are afraid to go out unaccompanied, it is alleged. An order of notice was given returnable August 17.

Mrs. Henneberry told Justice Churchill that she didn't want to have anything more to do with her husband, for he had promised to be good for the last ten years. When Joe told the judge that his wife never understood him, the court tried to reconcile the couple, with the result that the defendant is now at home, trying to keep away from hooch.

PARENTS ACCUSE TEACHER

Charge Children of Auburn Grammar School Are Cruelly Beaten

Worcester, Aug. 14.—Backed by the local branch of the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, more than 100 parents have demanded the removal of Miss Gladys Daggett, principal of the Stoneville Grammar School in Auburn.

It is charged that the teacher has abused some of her pupils.

One child is alleged to have been beaten so severely about the legs with a strap that the welts were visible three weeks after the alleged beating.

The M.S.P.C.C. was notified of alleged cruelty of the teacher and investigated. Officials of the organization then filed a report with the State Department of Education asking for an investigation. A petition also was drawn up by Selectman O. Emil Lindgren for an investigation. It was signed by 100 parents.

One case called to the attention of the M.S.P.C.C. authorities was that of Clarence Wolfe, thirteen years old, of Chestnut avenue, Auburn. It is claimed he was beaten severely and then became so ill he had to be removed to the Worcester Hospital.

HARDING WARNS OF DISASTER

Conference on Anthracite Situation Is to Be Held on Wednesday

Cleveland, Aug. 14.—President John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers today accepted an invitation from S. D. Warriner, heading the anthracite operators' scale committee, to meet the operators in conference at Philadelphia on Wednesday.

Philadelphia, Aug. 14.—Samuel D. Warriner, president of the Lehigh Coal and Navigation Company, and spokesman for the anthracite coal operators, announced today that he had notified John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, that the mine owners were willing to resume operations in the hard coal fields at the old wage scale pending the appointment of a commission to investigate the situation.

Mr. Warriner said he had tele-

Today the Sharon police informed the Quincy authorities that "Freddy" lived in South Boston. His grandfather, whose name is James Quinn, has a small Summer place at Sharon, where the boy and his mother visit.

graphed Mr. Lewis suggesting that a conference of anthracite operators and representatives of the miners be held in this city Wednesday.

Mr. Warriner's action followed a conference with United States Senator Pepper, Governor Sproul, W. J. Richards, president of the Philadelphia and Reading Coal & Iron Company.

pany, and William A. Glasgow, Jr., counsel for the United Mine Workers.

At this meeting, it became known today, Senator Pepper read a letter from President Harding in which the President declared that further delay in the resumption of mining would mean "danger of nothing short of nation-wide disaster."

WARNS OF CONSEQUENCES.

President Harding's letter to Senator Pepper follows:

"I am told that Mr. Lewis has indicated willingness to confer at once with the anthracite operators in case they invite him to do so. I suggest to you as the Senator from the State most directly concerned that the operators will be acting in the public interest if they promptly send him a cordial invitation to attend a conference to be called by them at such time and place as they may choose, with a view to the immediate resumption of production in the anthracite fields.

"I feel justified in making this suggestion, because these operators have manifested throughout a spirit of co-operation with the administration in seeking a fair basis upon which to adjust the anthracite strike.

"I understand that as a basis of conference Mr. Lewis stipulates for a return of the men at the old wage scale and the acceptance by the operators of the so-called Shamokin proposals. In extending their invitation, I hope the operators will indicate a willingness to take the men back at the old scale until a commission or other agency has had an opportunity to examine into the whole situation.

ASKS QUICK ACTION.

"As to the Shamokin proposals, I am hopeful that Mr. Lewis will regard them he proper for consideration at the conference rather than subjects of commitment in advance. I am hopeful of this because I credit both operators and miners with a sincere desire to resume anthracite production and I am sure that neither will place any unnecessary obstacle in the way of their adjustment.

"As to the time, I hope that the conference will take place in the immediate future."

Lewis Sure of Peace in Soft Coal Crisis

Cleveland, O., Aug. 14.—An agreement within forty-eight hours between the representatives of the United Mine Workers and the operators taking part in the conference here was predicted by John L. Lewis, international president, in the face of the present deadlock in the conference on the question of arbitration in the soft coal field.

That the question of arbitration can be disposed of before any headway can be made towards a settlement was indicated by the statement by Lewis that he will meet with Michael Gallagher and one other representative from either side today to take up the question of future strike prevention.

NORTHCLIFFE IS DEAD IN LONDON

London, Aug. 14.—Viscount Northcliffe, noted British publicist, died today. News of Lord Northcliffe's death was given out by the doctors who have been attending him in the following bulletin:

"Viscount Northcliffe died at 10:15 o'clock. The end was perfectly peaceful."

The death of no other unofficial personage could have made a deeper impression in England than that of Lord Northcliffe. The news was not a surprise, as the bulletins issued by the doctors for the last week plainly indicated that their patient was dying.

Lord Northcliffe was by far the greatest figure in British journalism, and the first question on everyone's lips was as to what effect his death will have on the policies of the Times and his other newspapers, which since the end of the war have strongly opposed the Lloyd George administration and its principles, with the notable exception of its dealings with Ireland, which the Northcliffe press supported throughout.

It was stated that the cause of Lord Northcliffe's death was suppuration, or the production of pus, within the heart, which was followed by acute blood poisoning.

Alfred Charles William Harmsworth, known as Lord Northcliffe, First Viscount, one of the world's most influential editors and publishers, was born in 1865 in Dublin.

While interested in trade schools, trained as a bookseller and worked for a time in the establishment of George Newnes, Rochester University, Rochester, N. Y.

He held no public office, but had more influence than many prime ministers. It is doubtful whether there is another man in England, except Lloyd George, who wielded such power.

In London, when he was seventeen years old, Northcliffe went to work for the Illustrated News. Later he shifted to Tit Bits. All the time that he was employed on these newspapers he was working out details of a publication of his own that would appeal to the masses. He started his first publication, a magazine, at the age of twenty-three. It was a weekly called Answers. He added to his newspaper holdings until at his death he was proprietor of four daily newspapers of tremendous circulation and sixty magazines.

He was made a viscount in 1917, in which year he was chairman of the British War Mission to the United States. The following year he was Director of Propaganda in enemy countries.

It was during the World War, when he fought Asquith, Kitchener and Lloyd George, that he became a world figure. His editorials aroused such fury that copies of them were burned in the London Stock Exchange.

BOLAND LETTER CALLS COLLINS BRITISH TOOL

By Cosmopolitan News Service

New York, Aug. 14.—The following historic letter from Harry Boland, written on the Dublin hills a few days before his death from bullet wounds, to Joseph D. McGarrity of Philadelphia was read to 4,000 sympathizers of the Irish Republic, who held a memorial service for Boland here. Before the Irish Free State was established, Boland represented Sinn Fein in America. It was Boland and Michael Collins, now premier of the Irish Free State, who effected the release of Eamon De Valera from an English prison and started the Irish rebellion. The letter:

"On the Dublin mountains, 13-7-22.

"My dear Joe: As I may not be in position to write to you again for some time and as I may very well be that I shall fall in this awful conflict, I want to place on record the events that have led up to this British manufactured war on the republic.

"In my last letter to you I wrote in a happy strain, as we had got a 'pact of peace.' Collins and De Valera had agreed to form a coalition cabinet. You will remember that the 'pact' was received with great alarm by the British, so much so that Lloyd George called Griffith and Collins to London and raised Hell with them.

"We do not know that Griffith carried the draft constitution of the Irish Free State with him to London. Said constitution was not acceptable to L. G. and his cabinet, with the result that the document was handed over by Griffith and company to the British experts who, in turn, turned out a constitution which made Ireland safe for the empire.

"BROKE THE PACT."

"Some days before election day, Mick Collins left for London. What transpired there we can only guess at. Moreover, Mick arrived in Cork on the night before polling day and in speaking to the crowds that had gathered to welcome, he, Mick, broke the pact and advised the people to vote for anyone they chose. He also said that he could now speak unhindered by the coalition.'

"The elections showed that the people favored the treaty and our party lost many seats, nevertheless we were prepared to work with them in order to stabilize conditions in the country. As you know I was the liaison, or medium, acting between our party and Collins. I expected a call from Mick as to the men on our side who would be required to fill the posts in the cabinet, in accordance with the agreement. No word came; instead in the early hours of Wednesday morning, June 28, the Free State Army opened the attack on the Four Courts with four pieces of British artillery.

"As a result of this attack the country is at war again and all Ireland is ablaze. O'Connell street is again in ruins and every county in Ireland is up. I have been in the gray since the start and the chief is now at general headquarters (Mallow).

"Munster is solid for the republic, as is most of the West. I do not know what may happen in Munster if the Free State troops invade that area. Of one thing I am certain, we cannot be defeated, even if Collins and his British guns succeed in garrisoning every town in Ireland. The government of the Free State shall not function, as they and their army and officials shall be treated exactly as the Black and Tans were treated by the Irish army.

REWARDS FOR TREACHERY.

"Mick has outdone Greenwood. His green and tans raided Mc-Endas at 11:30 p. m. last night and caused Mrs. Pearse to break down. Can you understand the mentality of men who are prepared to carry Ireland into the empire over the bodies of Republicans?

"The Supreme Council, I. R. B., are being rewarded for their treachery by being placed as military governors of his M's prisons. O'Heagherty is governor of Mountjoy and Oneroich is in command at Kilmainham. The drunken result of a drunken 'treaty,' drunkenly signed.

"The Dail has not been convoked as yet and the second Dail has not been resolved. We expect to hear that there should not be another meeting of the old Dail, as England is very anxious that the Dail will die and that the partition parliament shall take its place.

"I cannot help feeling that everything will yet work out right for Ireland. We shall see much slaughter and desolation ere this unholy strife ceases. Yet I am convinced that the end will leave Ireland more determined than ever to push on the road that leads to freedom.

"If it is so ordained that our cause goes down in defeat, then the world will say (when all the evidence has been weighed) that Ireland's latest act of protest against those who would enslave her into the British empire was the most glorious of all her glorious history.

GREATEST OF DAY.

Cathal Brugha is dead! No man is here to replace him. He was easily the greatest man of his day. What a wonderful fight he made, with his fifteen men, against an army. May God rest his soul and give his comrades the courage of Cuthal to fight till the fight is won.

Give my love to all. I shall never forget you or cease to love you whilst I live.

Your friend,

HARRY BOLAND."

At the meeting resolutions were adopted, condemning Collins as a "tool" of the British. Boland was fatally wounded while trying to escape from Nationalist soldiers who had arrested him.

Don't you see that a name and address is important?

Remember that every flapper in New England is eligible. The only requirement necessary is that you be a flapper at heart. A true, true member of the worthy sisterhood.

The flapper insignia has been chosen and every flap who sends a completely answered questionnaire to the Boston American Flapper will receive by return mail the sign of her Flapperdom. Remember to send a self-addressed, stamped envelope with your reply.

1—In my opinion they are. They stick to their word; a promise given is a promise kept.

2—Call up home and reverse the charges. If that failed, I'd look for a job for an hour or two to earn enough for carfare home.

11—Less exposed on top. Skirt length as it is at present.

12—No. A little is not the least bit harmful.

13—Flapper slang is merely a harmless way of expressing thoughts, but the vulgar slang of the street is a wicked and unpleasant mode of expression.

REBELS USE BOMBS TO TAKE DUNDALK

Belfast, Aug. 14 (By International News Service.)—Irregular troops were ejected today to have captured the great Irish port of Drogheda from the Free State forces.

Belfast, Aug. 14 (By the Associated Press).—A large force of Republicans entered Dundalk at 3:00 o'clock this morning, taking the national garrison completely by surprise. The attack was successful and the town is now isolated with Republican troops patrolling the streets.

The Anti-Treaty forces headquarters, which was occupied by the Nationals, was the first objective to be stormed and taken.

The jail was the next to fall, and all prisoners, who were mostly Republicans, were liberated. These were supplied with arms, and joined their rescuers in the attack on the town, in which bombs were freely used. The railway station and general postoffice were taken in succession.

Commandant McKenna, leader of the Irish insurgents in County Louth, and five other Republicans were killed during the fighting which resulted in the capture of Dundalk by the irregulars, says a report from that town. Commandant McKenna was captured by National forces during the Four Courts battle in Dublin, but escaped.

Irregulars Flying Helter Skelter

Cork, Aug. 14 (By the Associated Press).—The irregulars who evacuated Cork in the face of the advance of the national troops have apparently been completely routed and are flying helter skelter to the hills of Northeastern County Cork. The hills across the border in County Kerry are now sheltering large number of irregulars.

It is rumored that Daniel O'Callaghan, Lord Mayor of Cork, has been arrested, with Mary MacSwiney. The whereabouts of Eamon De Valera remains a mystery. When last seen here on Thursday evening he was driving westward in a closed carriage.

Collins Makes Peace Offer to De Valera

London, Aug. 14 (By the International News Service).—With Ireland mourning over the death of Arthur Griffith, a peace offer has been made to the Republican irregulars by Michael Collins, chief of the Irish provisional government administrative body of the Irish Free State, said a Central News dispatch from Dublin today.

SUES TENANT OVER PLACARD IN WINDOW

Because he placed a placard in his window, bearing a clipping from the Boston American referring to an increase in his rent, Israel Benson, lessee of a store at No. 1304 Beacon street, Brookline, was today made defendant in a bill in equity brought in the Superior Court.

The bill was brought by Julia F. French and Henry Loughary, lessees of the building which contains apartments and stores. It seeks to enjoin Benson from keeping the placard in his window.

The plaintiffs say the placard reads: "Customers please take notice. My rent has been increased 100 per cent. I cannot pay such high rent economically. Therefore I am going to a new location, No. 1449 Beacon street."

The petitioners say the placard was put in the window to injure the property, which they leased ten years from Hyman M. Rambach. Benson, they say, had a lease from that booth which runs out in 1923, so that he became their tenant. An order of notice returnable August 18 was issued.

DEMONSTRATION AT FUNERAL FEARED

London, Aug. 14.—Dublin is still stunned by the news of the death of Arthur Griffith. Prayers were offered for him in all churches Sunday and signs of mourning are still seen throughout the city.

The body of the President of the Republic lies in state in the City Hall and is being viewed by thousands.

The Irish provisional government has proclaimed three days of mourning preceding the funeral on Wednesday. This funeral promises to bring out the biggest and most spectacular demonstration for the Free State it has ever received here. Supporters of the Free State are expected to come from all parts of Ireland to pay tribute to the memory of the great Sinn Fein leader.

Attorney General Allen cited that the banking and other matters were so complicated and involved that it would be impossible to properly handle the inquiries he plans before a regular grand jury as he desires to complete them without interruption.

"My department," adds the letter, "has also conducted investigation of a number of other cases, all of which are quite complicated and will take time and should be handled without interruption."

"As some of the alleged violations disclosed by the investigations will be outlawed by the Statute of Limitations early in September, I desire to have the grand jurors summoned as a special grand jury on August 28."

Somerville force. He took her to the police station, where she told her story to Lieutenant James M. Harmon.

Miss McKinnon, who is twenty years old, said she was waiting for a car at the Park Street Subway Station when accosted by a young man, about twenty-five years of age. He recognized a Canadian pin she was wearing and asked her if she was from Nova Scotia. When she replied that she was, he said that was his home also. He said he was a student at Harvard Medical School and had served in the war with the Canadian Expeditionary Forces.

He proposed a car ride, Miss McKinnon said, and they went to Sullivan square and took a car for Somerville, alighting near the Wellington bridge over the Mystic River.

After sitting on the bank of the river, talking, for some little time, the young man savagely attacked her. Miss McKinnon said that he caught her by the throat and hit her in the face. She lost consciousness, and when she recovered he assailant had disappeared. After being revived at the Somerville police station, Miss McKinnon was able to return home.

NEW LINE TO BRING GRAIN TO BOSTON

The Rutland Railroad today announced, through the Boston Maritime Association, the establishment of a new rail and lake service between New England and Western points, via Ogdensburg, N. Y. The announcement is received by local shipping interests as one of the most important of the year.

D. Sullivan & Company of Chicago have organized the Rutland-Lake Michigan Transit Company, which will operate the steamers Burlington, Bennington and Brandon between Ogdensburg and Western lake ports. The new company will operate the 600,000 bushel grain elevator in Ogdensburg, loading cars there for New England territory.

The new service will give shippers lower rates than obtain on any other rail and lake service, and, of course, much lower rates than are offered by the all-rail routes.

The three steamers excited interest in Boston some time ago when they all loaded cargo here for Chicago and sailed for that port via the St. Lawrence. The mystery is now explained.

ACCUSED OF $1,100 THEFT IN STORE SALE

Charles H. Wright, fifty-one years old, of No. 21 Walden street, North Cambridge, was arrested on a charge of larceny of $1,100. It is alleged that he sold a grocery store in Somerville and when the purchaser took possession it was found that the boxes, bags and crates which Wright at all times had represented as containing groceries, were really filled with rubbish. The two buyers only were groceries, it is said.

'CAVE' WIFE DECLARES SHE'LL PUT HER 'TIMID' HUSBAND IN CELL

PINT NOW FIGURES IN CASE

Wed Him Through Matrimonial Bureau, Now Repents; Denies She Had 5 Husbands

By GRACE DES CHAMPS.

"I am going to land George White behind the bars or in an insane asylum for the rest of his life for attempted murderous assault upon me! That's my answer to his charges.

"I am going to tell of the insanity he has exhibited since a week after we were married. And as for that Spot Pond incident—it wasn't his fall in the Pond that made him mad. He dropped his precious pint of whiskey and broke the bottle. And he flew into a wild rage and fell into the water.

"Push him into the water? My husband isn't worth the danger I would incur by such foolishness. And, anyhow, if I were going to kill him, I shouldn't have waited all this time to do it. I'd have done it long ago—"

SHOWS INDIGNATION.

This is the first barrage Mrs. George M. White, "Cave Wife," so he says of George M. White, sends across in her answer to the charges of her husband that she tried to murder him, after she had successfully deposed of five other husbands.

Mrs. White, taking temporary refuge with her friends, Mr. and Mrs. William R. Roberts of No. 18 Webster street, Somerville, while she is out on bail of $1,000, tells a story today that differs somewhat from the Arabian Nights' tale related by her husband when he secured a warrant for her arrest on a charge of attempted murder.

EYES FLASH FIRE.

Neatly dressed and not unattractive, Mrs. White shows in her French ancestry in her flashing eyes that shot little darts of fire as she let loose her indignation in her first interview since the ill-fated "picnic" at Spot Pond.

"In the first place," Mrs. White resumed, "I never had five husbands. William Moran, who Mr. White says was one of them, never was married to me. We kept company for over a year, but we were never anything but just sweethearts.

"If you don't believe it, you can look up Moran now. We both came from Bangor and kept company in that city. Moran is now married now and is living with his wife and three children in Livermore Falls, Maine. He is a machinist there. So much for him.

DIVORCED IN 1917.

"I was married to John Curley, who came from Boston. He was a baker and cooked at several towns in Maine where I worked as a housemaid. We were married some time before 1914 and were divorced in 1917. The divorce proceedings were handled by an old attorney in Boston by the name of John Duffy. He is dead now, and I have never bothered to keep track of the papers. However, such a thing is a matter of public record and can be easily looked up.

"Mr. Curley and I were married in Northeast Harbor, Maine. Mr. Curley deserted me and when, sometime later, for his own purposes, he brought suit for divorce against me, I allowed the case to go uncontested because I though he might as well pay the court expenses.

"Mr. Curley is now married again, I understand.

ACCUSES WOMAN.

"But George is crazy, anyhow. He won't be any prize for any woman. I missed him in the middle of the night about a week after we were married, and when do you suppose I found him? Creeping along the floor on his hands and knees and making strange noises like the grunts of an animal.

HID KNIVES AND RAZORS.

"I was terribly frightened at first, but I got used to him later. Later I had to hide the knives and his razors on him. He'd get into a wild fit after drinking too much and I'd run and hide the knives. Of course he's crazy. Ask his brother, Luther White, out in Reading, about the time he had to throw George out of the house in a fit.

"Ask Mrs. Kelley, who lives on Mt. Pleasant avenue, Roxbury, about all the windows he broke in her house when he went into a tantrum there.

GOT WHITE THROUGH AD.

"I got George through an advertisement in the 'Cupid's Monitor.' We corresponded and later exchanged pictures. You ought to have heard George describe himself! I ought to have known better than to have taken a man's word about himself, but you've got to admit that when it comes to men, women are foolish.

"Well, George painted the future in rosy terms and I decided to take a chance. We went to Father Phelan at St. Joseph's Church, Roxbury, and were married July 31, 1918. No, I don't believe Father Phelan was exactly familiar with the way in which we met.

"It wasn't so long after we were married that I began to find some billet doux to George. Generally, they were the usual stuff. 'Don't think I have forgotten you; I am still true to you' and that sort of thing. I got hold of one of the letters, but George got it away from me and burnt it.

HAD HARD LIFE.

"I've had a hard life. I was born in Bangor and I've worked for a living ever since I was big enough to do a hard day's job at housework. It was foolish of me to write to 'Cupid's Monitor,' of course, but I sort of thought life might hold a kind husband for me and something a little better than what I had gotten before.

"This is the last straw. I am penniless and I must have money to hire a lawyer.

"I really shouldn't worry about this because my husband is mentally unbalanced and if an alienist should spend five minutes with him, I'd soon prove it. They wouldn't accept him in the draft because his head was too big. I could have told them that before the doctors ever examined him. But it'll be bigger when he finds himself in an asylum after the people who know him tell what he is.

"As for the insurance policy he says I took out on him—that's true. But I certainly never had any designs on him when I did so. I took it out only a few weeks ago and made only two payments on it. The policy has lapsed. I believe. It may as well, for all George is worth.

"Never marry a man, girls, through a matrimonial bureau! It's risky enough the other way, when you can look them over for a while before you take them. But, via mail, you haven't got a chance."

MRS. GEORGE M. WHITE

Refuting her husband's charges that she pushed him off a rock into Spot Pond, Mrs. White declares he isn't worth the danger she would incur by such foolishness. "If I were going to kill him I shouldn't have waited all this time," she says, in asserting that he himself fell into the pond while in a rage.

'WIFE NO. 6' ACCUSED OF TRYING TO KILL MATE

TREMONT PLAN HEARD IN SUIT BY WOMAN

The Tremont Plan, Inc., an organization headed by Simon Swig, stipulated today before Judge Keating in the Equity motion session of the Superior Court that, pending a hearing on the merits of a bill in equity brought by Minnie Daniels, the company will not take any more dividends on a deposit in the savings department of the Tremont Trust which were formerly in her name.

In a bill in equity brought by Mrs. Daniels she declared a representative of the Tremont Plan, Inc., told her the company was organized to protect and take over the deposits in the closed trust company.

She said she assigned her deposits of $700 to the Tremont Plan, Inc., and paid them $100 in addition. For this she received eight shares of stock in the Tremont Plan, Inc.

She asked that Bank Commissioner Allen be enjoined from payment of further dividends on her account to the Tremont Plan. She also demanded the return of her $100 and the reassignment of her deposits in the closed Tremont Trust Company.

MAN SLAIN IN HOME; WIFE IS GAGGED

Lakehurst, N. J., Aug. 14.—William Gilberson, former saw mill operator, was shot and killed by two burglars who entered his home here early today.

Mrs. Gilberson, who had been ill and was awake, said she heard a noise, went into the kitchen, lit a match, and then one of the intruders grasped her arm. After binding and gagging her, they went into the bedroom, and she heard a shot.

"I heard one of the men say, 'Why did you shoot him?' and the other replied, 'he was waking up,'" she said then the burglars fled, taking $100.

Mrs. Gilberson rolled down the stairs, ran the rag from her mouth and screamed for help.

BATTLE REVEALS LOVE NEST

It was a peaceful Sunday afternoon in Watertown. Suddenly an awful commotion.

A volley of crackling vituperation was followed by a smashing and banging. Residents thrust their heads from windows and discovered broken bits of furniture hurtling from the windows of the home of Andra Patrica at No. 39 Pleasant street. The climax was reached when a stove flew out the rear door, and thudded to rest in the yard.

Hurry calls for the police were turned in and Andra was charged with disturbing the peace. It developed that Andra and his woman companion had taken out a marriage license three years ago and considered themselves indissolubly bound in wedlock.

In court today both were charged with a statutory offence. Their cases were continued a week, during which time they promised to get married.

'Charming Girls' Should Be Bewitching; Entrancing

Free Wonder Trip to Atlantic City and Opportunity of Being Chosen "Miss America" Awaits Most Winsome Young Woman.

"What do you mean by the MOST CHARMING girl; what constitutes charm!"

This question has been asked several times by persons desiring to enter the Boston American's MOST CHARMING girl tournament. It has also been asked by persons desiring to nominate girl friends for the week's free trip to Atlantic City which this newspaper offers to the winner.

In reply to these queries the "Charming Girl" editor refers questioners to Webster's dictionary, which says that "charming" means fascinating, bewitching, captivating, delightful, enrapturing, entrancing, winning or irresistible.

Do you believe, girls, that any of these words describe you? Do you, readers, believe that any of them apply to the friend you intended nominating? If you think so fill out the coupon printed in the Boston American and send to this newspaper, with a good photograph.

LAST YEAR'S "MISS AMERICA."

The Boston American today prints a photograph of Miss Margaret Gorman of Washington, D. C., who was chosen as the most charming girl in America at the national beauty tournament in Atlantic City last year. She was crowned "Miss America" after being selected from a group of seventy-five girls from the leading cities of the United States and Canada who attended the great Fall pageant.

Girls desiring to enter the American's tournament and their friends are urged to closely study the photograph of Miss Gorman. In that way they will get a good idea of what the national judges last year thought constituted charm.

Does Greater Boston contain a girl as fascinating as Miss Gorman? If you think so let us know, for we want to send the most bewitching girl we can find to Atlantic City with her mother or other chaperon who may select for a week of pleasure.

GREAT TIME AWAITS HER.

The girl who wins the trip to America's greatest seaside resort during next month's pageant is going to have the time of her life. There is no mistake about that. All her previous vacations and outings will pale into insignificance compared with this trip to Atlantic City. There will be a suite at a leading waterfront hotel for her, automobile rides, airplane rides, yacht rides, dances, vaudeville shows, bathing in the famous breakers, rolling chair rides along the sunlit boardwalk and the best of food.

The girl chosen to represent Boston will be named "Miss Boston" and will also be crowned "Queen of the Hub." She may enter the Bathing Revue, one of the features of the Atlantic City pageant. The Sanitary Mills of No. 295 Fifth avenue, New York, has offered an "Annette Kellerman" bathing outfit to the winner, so that she may have a real snappy bathing suit to display her charms effectively in the bathing girl show. First prize in this bathing revue will be a $5,000 Golden Mermaid, molded from solid gold. Some prize, girls!

MOVIE JOB POSSIBLE.

Many motion picture managers will be at the pageant in search of good material for future stars. Wouldn't it be nice to have one of these managers say to "Miss Boston," "You are just the girl we have been looking for. You have all the qualifications for a certain part in our next picture. Your eyes are just right; your hair is adorable; your smile irresistible. Would you like a position with us at $10,000 a year?" What would you say to such a proposition? Many of today's movie stars made their start in some similar manner.

Among the latest entrants in the American's tournament are Miss Anna M. Zecha, a twenty-year-old manicurist living at No. 415 Crescent avenue, Chelsea, who was nominated by Thomas Sullivan of No. 64 James street, Malden.

Another recent entry is that of Miss Grace Brown, a young West Somerville girl, who is domiciled at No. 370 Main street, Nashua, N. H.

CAMBRIDGE ENTRY.

One of the first Cambridge entries is Miss Anna D. Coyle, a telephone operator, who lives at No. 353 Pearl street. She was nominated by Mrs. R. O. Patterson of No. 350 Pearl street, who is of the opinion that Miss Coyle is all the dictionary says a CHARMING girl should be.

East Boston has some unusually fascinating girls. Everybody who lives in that district knows that. Two of the first from that section to enter are Misses Mary R. and Josephine Hamilton of No. 64 Homer street. These sisters are regarded by their friends as captivating girls.

Others girls recently entered by themselves or by their friends include Julia Pulm, twenty-two, No. 21 Fourth street, East Cambridge; Carolyn A. Chute, eighteen, No. 88 Safford street, Wollaston; Margaret Sullivan, twenty-three, No. 16 Julian street, Roxbury; Hilda B. Farmer, twenty, No. 81 Newton street, Somerville; Anna G. Ilgovsky, nineteen, No. 76 Fairview avenue, Malden; Mary White, twenty-two, No. 19 Middle street, Watertown; May Phillips, twenty-three, No. 196 Eustis street, Roxbury; Hilda B. Seely, eighteen, No. 21 Margin street, Hyde Park; Hazel M. Bridges, eighteen, No. 16 Ball street,. Roxbury; Florence Winstrom, twenty-two, No. 18 Meridian street, East Boston; Ruth E. Bailey, twenty-one, No. 48 South Fairview street, Roslindale; Marion Kern, twenty-two, No. 53 Rockland street, West Roxbury; Agnes Zakszewski, sixteen, No. 49 Newman street, South Boston; Pauline Mason, sixteen, No. 24 Gale street, Malden; Helen Sellberg, twenty-one, No. 47 Nightingale avenue, South Quincy; Edith Ranson, sixteen, No. 59 Witham street, Gloucester; Marion McDermott, seventeen, No. 121 Earle street, Woonsocket, R. I.; Mary Litsio, nineteen, East Boston; Doris Gavend, nineteen, No. 63 Hiawatha road, Mattapan; Bertha Neven, twenty-three, No. 42 Frederick avenue, Medford; Betty Yette, nineteen, No. 110 Humboldt avenue, Roxbury; and Helen G. Goss, twenty, No. 47 Atherton street, Somerville.

Any of the following studios will give a free sitting to girls between 15 and 25 years of age, inclusive, who wish to enter the tournament: Te Craftsman, No. 561 Boylston street; Bachrach, No. 647 Boylston street; Notman, No. 1286 Massachusetts avenue, Cambridge; Champlain, No. 101 Tremont street; Marlboro, No. 164 Tremont street; Parham, No. 165 Tremont street; Waid, No. 168 Tremont street, and Otto Sarony, No. 146 Tremont street.

THREE FLEEING MEN SHOT AT BY OFFICER

Residents of Roxbury in the vicinity of Columbus avenue and Sarsfield street, were today aroused by a fusillade of shots, fired by Patrolman English of Roxbury Crossing police station during a chase of three men.

The policeman pursued the three, whom he had caught attempting to enter the plant of the Moore Machine Company, Columbus avenue and Sarsfield street, for nearly a mile, but they made good their escape.

While patrolling his route Officer English saw the men at work on the door of the machine company. He hastened his steps and the men on seeing him, fled down Columbus avenue.

English drew his revolver and fired in the air, but the shots served only to increase the pace of the fugitives. Through side streets and back yards they flew, accelerated every now and then by the sharp explosion of the police pistol.

At length, dodging on to the New Haven tracks, the men managed to slip away into the darkness. English, assisted by citizens aroused by the shots, continued his search for some time, but without success.

CAR PLUNGES IN SWAMP, DRIVER DROWNED

Haverhill, Aug. 14.—Joseph Bouchard, forty-five years old, of No. 218 Main street, Bradford, was drowned when the car he was driving on the Burnt Swamp road, East Kingston, N. H., left the road and plunged eight feet over an embankment into a swamp.

Leo Thibadeau of Newton, N. H., who was with Bouchard, jumped, and escaped with scratches.

Thibadeau's contention that their car was hurled from the road when another car struck them was not substantiated by the police investigation. Bouchard had drawn up at the side of the narrow road to let another car pass, and when he started up again, he failed to make the turn properly.

Bouchard was an old Haverhill baseball player. He leaves a widow, a daughter, a mother and five children.

MOTHER IN COLLAPSE WHEN CHILD DROWNS

South Royalston, Vt., Aug. 14.—Elizabeth J. Sumner, aged ten, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold M. Sumner, met death by drowning when she waded out beyond her depth in the White River, one mile above Sharon. Mrs. Fred O. Billings, wife of the former State Senator, swam to her aid, together with the child's mother, but the child was beyond their help.

The mother is reported to be in a serious condition as a result of the tragedy and her efforts to rescue the child.

ENGINE LEAVES RAILS; TIES UP SO. STATION

Hundreds of commuters were delayed going to work today by two derailments of trains.

One occurred within 200 feet of the South Station, when a train of the Providence division of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad went off the tracks.

The other was at the Haymarket station, when a Lechmere Square elevated train derailed just as it was going into the tunnel at that point.

In the N. Y., N. H. & H. derailment the cause was a pony truck wheel the small wheel in front of the locomotive) coming off. This caused the locomotive to run off the track. Passengers were jarred and frightened, but nobody was injured. Several score passengers walked to the station on the tracks.

The South Station derailment occurred at 8 o'clock. The Haymarket derailment was less than half an hour later. The Haymarket Relief Station is directly above the spot where the train went off the tracks, but the services of the station were not required, although the passengers were shaken up. Traffic was held up for half an hour.

The train derailed at the South Station was No. 1,367 and the accident held traffic on the main line from Providence for half an hour. Passengers from locals got off at the Back Bay station. The Owl Express, due here from New York at 7:45 was delayed 40 minutes, and the Federal Express from New York was held up 20 minutes by the accident. Both unloaded at the Back Bay station.

April 20, certificate of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., valued at $320 from George L. Rosebrooke, and on May 4, from the same complainant, another Goodyear certificate valued at $820 and one of the Winchester Arms Co., valued at $325.

April 26, $500 in cash from William Quackenbush.

May 1, $150 in cash from Daniel Peterson.

May 2, $80 in cash from Adelard P. Billings.

May 4, stock certificate valued at $300 from Henry Sandler.

May 5, certificate of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, valued at $2,400, from Angelo Calderon.

The above alleged larcenies total $6,185.

Golberg and Friedberg pleaded not guilty and furnished each bail to the sum of $5,000.

Frank Cohen, owner of the car, was charged with permitting his car to be so used, and with endangering life and allowing more than two persons to sit on the front seat.

Dr. William Turetsk, of No. 1077 Blue Hill avenue, the third passenger on the front seat, and the only one in the car holding an operator's license, was charged with operating in a manner to endanger life. All pleaded not guilty. Their cases were continued for a hearing on September 7.

AMERICAN OFFERS $45 IN PRIZES TO YOUNG MOSQUITO-KILLERS

MAIL DEAD BODIES OF PESTS

Boys and Girls Have Two Weeks in Which to Slay Trouble-Breeders

The Boston American will give a prize of $25 to the boy or girl turning in the largest number of dead mosquitoes in the next two weeks, and for conclusive evidence that they have aided in wiping out the pest in stagnant pools and other breeding places, there will be a second prize of $15 and a third of $5.

The contest is open to all children in the State up to fifteen years of age.

Send in your dead mosquitoes to the Mosquito Editor not later than Saturday, August 26.

WIPE OUT PEST SPOTS.

Some people apparently think that it is rather late in the summer to start to fight mosquitoes.

Mosquitoes infest the same places, year in and year out, and if these breeding places are successfully cleaned out this Summer, the insects will be "out of luck" for a home next year. That is why the Boston American is waging this campaign and urging every man, woman and child in the State to assist.

That the mosquito menace was never fully appreciated by most of the inhabitants of this commonwealth is shown by the deluge of letters that is greeting the Mosquito Editor every day. From all parts of the State come complaints against conditions that should be rectified by the municipalities.

In every town, apparently, there is a central spot, with some outlying branches, in which mosquitoes breed unchecked during the entire season. Work, hard work, will be needed to put these places out of existence.

WORTH TIME AND MONEY.

It will take time and it will take money, but the results are well worth both. It is up to the voters in every town and city to take action in eliminating the nuisances by getting an appropriation from their local government to combat the peril.

Tell your troubles to the Boston American and it will do its level best to make your town a better one, from the mosquito standpoint, in which to live.

However, there is no use cleaning out the big pools of stagnant water if you are going to allow the old tin cans to accumulate in your yard, to furnish comfortable breeding places for more mosquitoes. There is but one place for those tins and that is the community dump.

The response to this campaign is remarkable. Not only are adults responding but children are jumping in line. Applications for the Massachusetts Anti-Mosquito Association, Inc., are being received by the score each day. As the charter closes on September 1, the necessity for prompt action is readily seen.

OPEN TO SUGGESTIONS.

But the task requires the active co-operation of hundreds of thousands and not just thousands. Hundreds of thousands are really needed to make the "war" a success. There are millions in the mosquito army and the number increases every day.

The Massachusetts Anti-Mosquito Association, Inc., is ready for suggestions, through the Boston American, or otherwise, for putting the mosquitoes out of action. In this association are the keenest minds in the State, on problems affecting the health and well-being of the commonwealth. But they cannot work alone.

Join the association and show by your open support that you are for this movement. It costs nothing to join and the only obligations are that you get out and do your part in ridding our State of the pest that has been here so long that most people think there is no relief.

Panama is clean, England is clean, as far as mosquitoes are concerned. Massachusetts can be just as clean if you and your neighbor will take up the cudgel and work hard.

The drivers of both cars were attempting to avoid being hit by a fire truck returning from an alarm.

The injured are:

WILLIAM SMITH, twenty-three years old, No. 1114 Bennington street, East Boston. Fractured left leg, six stitches in face and broken nose.

JOSEPH KRAATZ, driver of one of the cars, of No. 1114 Bennington street, East Boston; two broken ribs.

MRS. PATRICK FINNEGAN, No. 142 Adams street, Ashmont; bad cuts about the head and face. Knocked unconscious.

ALICE FINNEGAN, seven years old, of No. 142 Adams street, Ashmont; five stitches in face. Thrown through windshield.

MISS ESTHER PETERS, twenty years old, of No. 204 Harrison avenue, Boston; lacerated forehead, contusions of the right knee.

MRS. JOSEPH KRAATZ, shaken up and slight cuts.

MARTIN J. MAGUIRE, of No. 42 Granger street, operator of the other car, was shaken up.

The Kraatz machine was going in the direction of Ashmont as the hose-wagon to fire engine No. 17 sounded its siren when approaching Adams street from Hecla street. Mr. Kraatz, according to occupants of the car, drew up to the side of the road.

A big car, driven by Mr. Maguire, was coming from the opposite direction and in trying to avoid crashing into the fire auto swung to the side of the road. The two machines came together with such force that they were wrecked.

Mrs. Harding Sends $100 to Help Old Horse "Clover"

Catawissa, Pa., Aug. 14—Mrs. Warren G. Harding has presented a check for $100 to "Clover," a fifty-one-year-old horse. In a letter from the President's wife to the animal's owner, Rev. Dr. Myers, she expressed herself deeply moved by "the sense of justice and gratitude and faithfulness which impels you to sacrifice your comfort rather than kill a splendid horse which has given you a long life of willing service."

ANOTHER GLAND OPERATION BY HANSON

West Dennis, Aug. 14.—Defying town authorities, who refused him a license to establish a sanatorium here to conduct gland research work, Dr. Leo J. Hanson announced that he would perform another gland operation today identical to that performed on young John P. McCormack, who died at the doctor's sanatorium two weeks ago following his gland operation for slipepsy.

The new patient, who is a young man in his twenties, from Roxbury, will be operated upon in an endeavor to cure chronic epilepsy.

Meanwhile the townsfolk declare they will oppose to the last ditch the work of Dr. Hanson, whether it be transplanting "love glands" or merely gland operations upon defective individuals.

One prominent resident of the town of West Dennis declared:

"Dr Hanson's avowed defiance of the law can have but one result, and, in turn, will fight him until we drive him out of town. Money is available, all that is necessary, to carry on the fight to expel him."

PASSED SPECIAL LAW.

Both sides are equally sure of victory. The townsfolk aver that the selectmen, under the State law, have power to establish the rules governing hospitals. To this effect, the selectmen three weeks ago, passed a law prohibiting the use of any dwelling as a hospital that stood within 1200 feet of another residence. This law was aimed directly at Dr. Hanson.

He in turn filed application for a permit to establish a sanatorium under this new law. After a stormy and picturesque town meeting, the application was refused.

Dr. Hanson now intends to carry on his research work, operate on patients and establish a hospital despite the refusal of a permit.

DOUBTS AUTHORITY.

He declares the selectmen have no authority to take action, and says there is nothing in the State law to prevent him from establishing a hospital anywhere he wishes. In this position he declares he is supported by Dr. Eugene Kelley, Commissioner of the State Board of Health.

LYNN INSPECTOR UP FOR INSUBORDINATION

As a result of a hearing today before the Lynn committee on police, Inspector Roger Dwyer will appear this week before Mayor McPhetres on charges of insubordination. Chief Inspector Kane says Dwyer failed to turn over money to a prisoner's attorney when Kane had ordered him to do so. Instead Dwyer put the money in a bank in the prisoner's name, it is alleged.

London, Aug. 14 (By International News Service).—A Central News dispatch from Helsingfors today reported the sinking of a Russian destroyer. No details were given. A second dispatch said that the destroyer had been sunk during manoeuvres but made no mention of casualties.

HIT BY AUTO, BOY'S SKULL FRACTURED

Peter Canto, thirteen years old, of No. 291 Causeway street, was struck by an auto near Keaney square today. At Relief Hospital he was treated for a fractured skull. The auto was driven by George Crossman, of No. 77 Willard street, Chelsea.

TEN DIED WHEN CAR WENT INTO AIR

Annandale, Minn., Aug. 14.—The death toll in the wreck of a train of the Minneapolis, St. Paul & Sault Ste Marie Railroad, caused when the train hit a truck near here, remained at ten today.

The truck was hit squarely and hurled against a freight engine on a side track. A switch stand was knocked down and three coaches of the passenger swung over to the side track into a train of freight cars. The baggage car crashed over the overturned freight engine. Several other passenger cars were derailed.

Most of the dead and injured were in the smoker, which reared up into the air and toppled over. Part of the wreckage caught fire, but the blaze was soon extinguished.

According to Dr. A. G. Moffat, coroner, there will be no inquest.

CADETS ON WAY BACK TO ACADEMY

Halifax, Aug. 14.—Their bandplaying "Auld Lang Syne," the middies, clad in white lining the decks, the United States midshipmen's practice squadron sailed today for Annapolis. The squadron, under Rear Admiral Newton A. McCully, spent twelve days here. The 1,700 future American naval officers were feted and royally entertained here.

HUNT CLEW IN BURNING OF ENGINES

Portland, Me., Aug. 14.—Railroad officials today placed at $400,000 the damage caused by the fire of undetermined origin which burned a roundhouse and a score of locomotives here yesterday.

Less of the engines, which were in the freight service of the Boston & Maine and Maine Central or used by the Portland Terminal Company will not cripple service on the roads, officials said.

Sheriff King F. Graham, who began an investigation into the cause of the fire, said today that he had been as yet unable to see any legitimate cause for the explosion which preceded the fire or the blast that followed the outburst of the flames in a small structure near the engine house.

Sheriff Graham later today said he was satisfied the fire was not caused by spontaneous combustion, nor from any other ordinary causes in the wooden structure in which it started. "We are satisfied that it was of incendiary origin," he added.

Eight of the engines damaged belonged to the Maine Central, seven to the Portland Terminal Company and five to the Boston & Maine.

YOUTH IN COURT ON PEEPING TOM CHARGE

The complainant was Mrs. Margaret Montgomery of No. 42 Kenilworth street, who claimed that young Tatton peeped into her room when she was retiring. Yesterday on the street Mrs. Montgomery [illegible] man Cromwell, who captured the young man after a chase.

LOVE CREED OF PROF. LONG IS BARED

Professor Arthur Griswold Long, whose attempt to re-establish the worship of Isis as a love cult in Boston landed him in jail and later in the psychopathic hospital, wrote a creed.

He never intended it to be published, but the Boston American is enabled to print it today, under the seer's own signature, in its expose of his activities here.

By PROFESSOR ARTHUR G. LONG

The eyes are the windows of the soul. To the pure, the highest spiritual vision, through the faculty of the imagination, is that of the feminine form—man's counterpart and co-equal with him.

The female form, undraped, is the divine representative of love. She represents the kingdom of heaven, the joy and pleasure and happiness of the world to which man in his journey through life unconsciously looks upward. But owing to man's undevelopment, together with the struggle for existence of woman, she has become the way of death for many. Hence she is often wrongly condemned by the churches and other moral agencies for enticing men through the arts of love.

Only through the unfoldment from within can understanding be attained, and this is in accordance with the scriptural words: "Suffer the children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

It was in the practice of this creed that Professor Long came to grief. The mothers of three girls—all minors—caused his arrest for improper conduct in his studio.

ISMS WHILE YOU WAIT.

If one has failed to attract interest from the prospective devotee, the professor had another on tap. With his room in a lodging house at No. 97 Lucerne street, Dorchester, as a studio, he printed business cards which designated his movement as the Metaphysical and New Thought Center. On these cards he printed the isms he subscribed to and offered to teach, as follows:

Advanced Thought.
Mental Science.
Christain Mysticism.
Occult Psychic and Spirit Mysticism.
The Kabbala.
Healing Through Music.
Violin Instruction.
The Grosvenor Fraternity.

The last named was the love cult in which Long sought as members young girls from the age of fourteen to twenty-one, preferably out of school. The invitation, as set forth by the professor, was a banquet in which the novitiates dined without dinner clothes.

In fact the rules called for an entire absence of attire, and emphasized that during these initiatory dinners the only man present was to be the professor himself.

It was in pursuit of clients for this enterprise that the professor sought and found no trouble in finding stays at the homes of women in various parts of Greater Boston. In every instance, however, his visit was short and his departure abrupt. In the complaints against him the professor must have run foul of stern law, for he is found inquiring of a local newspaper on the subject of marriage laws. The answer to his question appeared as follows:

"The laws in Massachusetts are very explicit on the subject of marriage. If one goes to another State to have a marriage performed that could not be solemnized here, that marriage is void here, whether you stay here or not."

URGED FREE LOVE.

In his manuscript on "Spiritualism" there is a cautioning phrase on the flyleaf, which says:

"This key is the property of Arthur Griswold Young. It is forbidden to make any extracts from it."

Despite Professor Long's explicit orders, the American presents herewith, in part, his chapter on "Marriage," which was the basis of the philosophy which landed him in jail and in the psychopathic ward:

Marriage is wrong and results in loss, not gain, of freedom. It is often the cause of worldly ruin and death, spiritually and bodily, for worldly men and of life-long sorrow and suffering for many women.

Marriage is only a form under the law which regards a wife as the property or servant of her husband. For those, men and women, who are possessed of spiritual knowledge, the law does not count. They are above it. They do not marry. There was no one to marry Adam and Eve.

From all over New England came letters from girls who had been intrigued by lectures embodying the above sentiments. One, signed by a girl from Beachmont, Me., whose name the American suppresses, was as follows:

Dear Mr. Long:

Was very pleased to hear from you. We all appreciate your kindness in inviting us to your lectures. . . . The girls could come any night this week but the two following weeks we will be away on our vacations and therefore will be unable to come until August, which is all right for us if convenient for you.

In answer to an inquiry from a young correspondent as to the meaning of "The Higher Law" as espoused by Professor Long, he wrote:

The higher Law is consummated and fulfilled by the coming together of the male and female in sexual union, whether in the developed or undeveloped, and whether in marriage or out of it. Contrary to the teaching of many, it is not merely a physical or animal function, but a divine or spiritual one, fulfilling the higher law of God.

GOULSTON SAYS ALLEN DOESN'T TELL TRUTH

Ernest J. Goulston, host at the famous Quincy House dinner party to Governor Cox, which was raided by prohibition officers, scored Attorney General Allen for his reference to the affair at a political meeting in Provincetown. Goulston, who is in Washington, declared that Allen's remarks were "cheap and mendacious."

"I am satisfied that the method of attack used by Allen will not find favor with thinking Republicans of Massachusetts," said Goulston. "The first requisite of a fit Governor of Massachusetts is that he tell the truth. Mr. Allen does not do this."

"Cut a Cord of Wood," Maine Fuel Shortage Slogan

Augusta, Me., Aug. 14.—Governor Baxter has announced a slogan which he hopes will stir the people of Maine into action in coping with the fuel crisis. It is "cut a cord of wood and cut out coal."

The Governor calls for the organization of big "wood chopping bees" as a further means of relief, and there is every indication of a wide-spread response.

STRIKERS TOLD TO LOOK FOR NEW JOBS

Providence, R. I., Aug. 14.—Textile workers in the Blackstone Valley, who have been on strike since last January, were today advised to seek work elsewhere by Thomas F. McMahon, national president of the U. S. Textile Workers.

In a short statement McMahon advised the strikers to obtain jobs anywhere except in the mills affected by the strike. He also called on Bishop William A. Hickey, Bishop James DeWolf Perry, Governor Sam Sonzi and the members of the Rhode Island delegation in Congress, asking aid in obtaining a settlement of the strike.

"L" TRUSTEES TO HEAR FARE CUT PLEA

The trustees of the Boston Elevated Street Railway Company are to hold a public hearing at 2:30 p. m. August 16 on the request of Thomas A. Niland of East Boston to show cause why street car fares should not be reduced at least to eight cents. Lieutenant-Governor Fuller, Sherman L. Whipple, Mayor Curley, Councillor William J. Foley, former Representative Robert Bigney of South Boston and others have been invited to speak.

EXPECT FOUNDRY SALE TO END LONG STRIKE

Westfield, Aug. 14.—The H. B. Smith foundry, where a strike of 1,100 employes has been in effect fifteen weeks, has been purchased by local business men, it was learned today. The purchase is expected to mean the end of the strike.

MANY YANKEES GAMBLING AT DEAUVILLE

By C. F. BERTELLI,
Universal Service Staff Correspondent
Special Wireless to Universal Service.

Deauville, Aug. 14.—The total attendance at the week's races was smaller this year than for any season since the armistice. This was in spite of the wholesale cut in prices which brought the gin fizz down to a $1, a good dinner with wine down to $10, a hall bedroom to $15, and a fancy lemonade to $1.50.

But although the crowd was smaller, the richest clothes imaginable were disported. The record was broken by the new showing of evening gowns, the price of which averaged $1,200. The chief attractions and principal advantage in the new gowns was the shimmer of brilliant surface. A disadvantage is that the wearer does not dare to sit down for fear of spoiling the delicate dress forever.

GERMAN FASHIONS BACK.

German fashions returned to Deauville for the first time since the war with the Baroness von Lettingen wearing a Berlin-made brocade with willow plumes trimming.

Bags with the motif taken from the robes of a Russian priest are the latest innovation for evening wear.

With the arrival of the King of Spain the number of baccarat tables has been increased to eighty, but the Spanish ruler has thus far confined his appearance at the Casino to a short after-dinner visit, leaving the Baroness Erlanger, formerly Mrs. Peter Cooper Hewitt, still reigning as queen of the sky's-the-limit table.

Freda De Berniche, once known as the friend of statesmen in all the European capitals, and years ago the "Queen of Monte Carlo," created a week-end sensation by reappearing from her war seclusion at Vienna.

WAITS FOR PEGGY JOYCE.

Dartex, another famous casino girl [illegible] thirty years ago, also arrived in a Rolls Royce.

The players at the big table include Henri Letellier, who while waiting the arrival of Peggy Joyce, is staking pretty Jacqueline Campbell, a most consistent loser.

Gilbert Miller, well known theatrical costumer of New York, and Preston Gibson, the artist, are also among the big players, as is Captain Molineux, who plays partner with Yancsi Dolly, often pitted against the other Dolly sister, with Yancsi the husband of the Rhode Island delegation in Congress, asking aid in obtaining a settlement of the strike.

Helen Victor is seen wearing a magnificent necklace of eight strands of large pearls, said to have been the property of one of the former grand Dukes and to have been given her by Lenin a year ago when she was known as "The Red Girl." The Grand Duchess Marie refused to play Thursday when she saw Helen sitting at the table.

STREET RAILWAY KICKS AT JITNEYS

Daniel MacLean of Melrose and Herbert Hoppe of Everett were arraigned in the Chelsea Court today on a charge of operating automobile busses in Revere without a license from the City Council. The men were arrested in Revere after they had arrived with a cargo of passengers from Malden. They are employed by the Eastern Massachusetts Street Railway Company which operates busses between Malden and Revere Beach.

The Eastern Massachusetts Street Railway Company has complained of the busses. A letter was sent to the Mayor a week ago, asking him to stop the busses in Revere.

"I'D BE A FOOL TO STAY SINGLE," CRIES 'BLACK HAND' WIDOW

VENGEANCE DONE, SHE WILL WED

Widows Should Punish Slayers, and Then Marry, Says Mrs. Scarpone

By GRACE DES CHAMPS.

"Any woman is foolish who doesn't marry—no matter if her husband WAS murdered within a year!

"Besides, I'm only twenty-three, even if I have two children. I'd be a silly girl to let my husband's ghost stand between me and happiness."

To disapproving friends this is the challenge of the youthful widow of Michael Scarpone, murdered last January by a "Black Hand" gang, who remained in her North End home despite constant threats of the gang until she had aided the police in rounding up the last assassin of her husband—and then suddenly announced her coming marriage to Guerino Colangelo of Charter street, North End.

"I met Guerino shortly after my husband was shot," said Mrs. Scarpone, "and I liked him immediately. I made two vows that day. I promised myself not to leave a stone unturned until I had found the murderers of my husband, and that I would marry Guerino Colangelo as soon as I had done so.

IGNORES NEIGHBORS.

"Well, the men who killed my husband have all been found and are going to be punished. And now I'm going to marry Guerino."

The contempt of the older women who live on Charter street and sell bananas and tend the young Italian babies is nothing to pretty, young Jennie Scarpone.

"They're just old women," she sniffs, equally contemptuous.

"I'm not going to try to bring my children up alone and anyhow, I care for Guerino very much. He is a very good looking man. He has a good job and we shall begin life again just where it was broken off when the Camorra men killed my husband last Winter.

SIGN OF TRUE LOVE.

"If a widow marries again—especially within a short time—it's a sign she cared a lot for her first husband. I loved my husband dearly but I'm going to like Guerino just as much.

"Guerino came to board with my sister last winter. I saw him nearly every day but I never pretended that I cared anything about him. I had my own business to do before I could think of getting another husband. But I planned to notice him just as soon as I had furnished the police with all the information I could find.

"Some nights, after I had received threats from the men or friends of the men who killed my husband, I would be frightened and I would gather my babies about me and wish that there were some man whom I could trust to protect me. Sometimes Guerino would be in the same house with me but I would not go near him. I was very glad when the police caught the 'Black Hand' men, for then I was free to look upon Guerino as a sweetheart.

DEATH IS AVENGED.

"And what is wrong about that? Why should people say I didn't care anything about Michael? I did all I could for him and I saw that his death was avenged. That's what any good woman should do when her husband is killed—and then marry again, herself."

Mrs. Scarpone is credited by the police with being the real force which rid Boston of a powerful gang of "Black Handers" who are believed to have many killings to their credit.

The young woman's relentless efforts won her the name of "The Girl Nemesis." She warmed her way into every dive and haunt of the men whom she believed to be responsible for her husband's murder and the threats of these men only made her more reckless in her efforts.

The trial of the seven men charged with the murder of Scarpone has attracted wide attention. It is the first time in Boston for many years that so many have been tried for the murder of one man.

DEATH AN EXAMPLE.

Scarpone was shot in the doorway of his home on Unity street, on January 20 last, when he failed to forward $500 to the "Black Hand" gang as commanded in frequent letters. His death, it is said, was to have been an example to other prosperous merchants of the North End, upon whom the gang had designs.

"If I were old I should not marry again," concluded the young widow and bride-to-be. "Love is not for the old. I should sit in my kitchen and sew for my children and never think again of any man. But I am only young—and Guerino is very good-looking."

An Old Sweetheart

Lillian Woods of the "Follies," to wed Park Alan Grundy, a Crucible Steel executive. They met ten years ago when she was only nine.

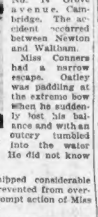
CANOEIST DROWNS GIRL ESCAPES

Howard Oatley, thirty-one years old, foreman at the Gray & Davis factory in Cambridge, was drowned in Charles river while canoeing with Miss Agnes G. Connors of No. 14 Grove avenue, Cambridge. The accident occurred between Newton and Waltham.

Howard Oatley.

Miss Conners had a narrow escape. Oatley was paddling at the extreme bow when he suddenly lost his balance and with an outcry tumbled into the water. He did not know how to swim.

The canoe shipped considerable water and was prevented from overturning by the prompt action of Miss Connors, who caught a bush and held on desperately while screaming for help. She had no means of propelling the canoe as Oatley carried the paddle with him.



Agnes G. Connors.

Oatley was unmarried and lived with his sister, Mrs. Archer Slade, of No. 11 Flor street, Cambridge. He had been employed at the Gray & Davis factory eight years. He was a World War veteran, serving as an expert electrician in an aero squadron overseas. He was born in Providence, where his father now lives.

STABBED BY HATPIN, WON'T TELL MYSTERY

When Jeremiah Butler, fifty-one years old, a plumber of Langley road, Newton Centre, who was arrested by Patrolmen Jenkins and Sullivan, was booked on a charge of intoxication by Lieutenant Michael Hughes in the West Newton police station, he suddenly dropped on the floor unconscious.

He was taken to the Newton Hospital and found to be suffering from half a dozen stab wounds, evidently made by a hat pin. He refused to tell how he came by the wounds, declaring that he was perfectly able to fix the person himself who did it.

FOLLIES GIRL TO MARRY OLD SWEETHEART

New York, Aug. 14.—Ten years is a long time in love affairs. It is an especially long time when the two principals of a love story do not see each other for that length of time.

When Lillian Woods of the Ziegfeld Follies, today made known her engagement to Park Alan Grundy, Crucible Steel executive, the accuracy of " Absence makes the heart grow fonder" was exemplified.

Miss Woods, hurrying from the Follies to the Rendesvous Restaurant on West Forty-fifth street, where she performs at midnight, told a reporter of the American of her romance with the wealthy young man. She said:

"We met ten years ago."

"I was only nine then. Park was fourteen. We had a great time in Baltimore together. Our parents were with us and we became great pals. For six months I had the time of my life and I never forgot Park.

"But I didn't see him for ten years. I often wondered what had become of him. Then, three weeks ago, there he was, sitting in a box right off the stage. He came to the stage door after the show and you know——

"Love will win! We expect to be married in October."

Grundy is a Lehigh College graduate. He served in the navy in the war. He is in the fireproofing business in Manhattan.

Miss Woods comes from Toronto. She said:

"I have no folks and I will give up the stage if Park wants me to. I'd love to manage a household. I know everything is going to be lovely."

HERE'S CHANCE TO GROW FAT ON 50C. PER DAY

State College, Pa., Aug. 14.—That it is possible for six persons to subsist—and even grow fat—on an average of less than fifty cents a day for each, has been demonstrated at the Summer session of the Pennsylvania State College. This information was given out today by Miss Edith P. Chace, head of the college home economics department, upon the conclusion of the seventh week of the Summer school.

Five girl Summer students and an instructor, residing in the college's model practice house while studying scientific home management, reduced the fifty-cent average set by last Winter's students to forty-eight cents a day for each person. By using garden vegetables the Summer students cut costs to sixteen cents a meal.

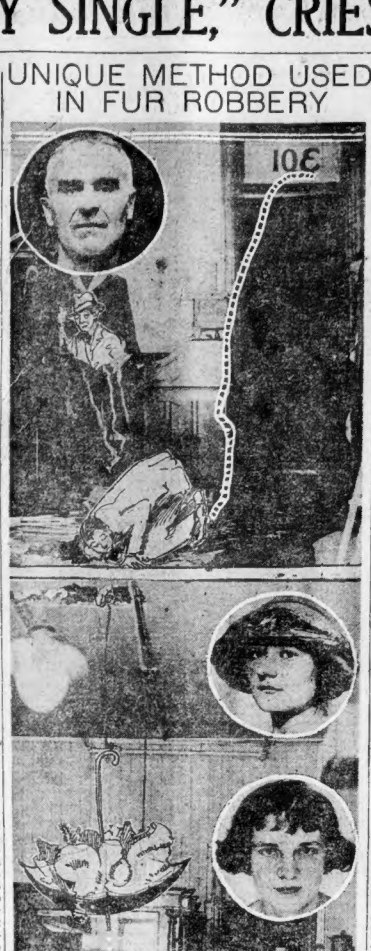
UNIQUE METHOD USED IN FUR ROBBERY



Thieves entered the floor above Sussman's Washington street fur store, bored a hole in the floor and pushed a closed umbrella through it. Then they opened the umbrella and enlarged the hole to man's size, the opened umbrella catching the debris. Insert in the picture are (at top), P. E. Walsh, steward at Louis' Restaurant, who found the abandoned furs; (below) Miss Shirley Kaplan, bookkeeper for Sussman, who discovered the loss of furs, and Miss Beatrice Freeman, Goldberg's bookkeeper, who discovered the break in the floor.

THIEVES LEAVE FUR PLUNDER

A $30,000 fur robbery in the establishment of M. Sussman, No. 611 Washington street, was frustrated after the thieves had almost made their getaway.

With the loot bundled in burlap bags, the thieves made their way to the dining room of Louis' Cafe, 16 Fayette court, where they became frightened and fled, leaving the furs behind.

The goods, consisting of mink and Alaska seal furs, and a $1,200 mink coat, were recovered today by Captain H. W. Goodwin of the Lagrange street police station.

The robbers forced their way into the coat store of Goldberg & Co., on the third floor of the building at No. 611 Washington street sometime Sunday. Cutting a hole in the floor, they dropped into the Sussman establishment, and gathered up the furs, the majority of which were not made up. The furs were placed in three bags and the thieves then broke into the office of the Federal Leather Company on the same floor.

Going through a window they made their way by fire escape to the roof and thence to Avery street by another fire escape, entering the kitchen of Louis' French restaurant, through a window.

Here they evidently became frightened, and leaving the bags on the floor, retraced their steps and reached the street by a spiral stairway.

The valuable furs, in their burlap coverings, were seen by painters at work in the kitchen of the restaurant Sunday afternoon, but were not disturbed. The porter who opened the establishment today also saw the bags, but believed them to contain supplies for the restaurant. They were taken to the Lagrange street police station.

POLICE ON HUNT FOR BIGAMIST PRINCE IN HUB

Local police are searching through the South End for Harold Schwarm of New Britain, Ct., who is accused of contracting bigamous marriages and writing worthless check in Eastern cities under the name of Henri Louis de Chatereaux de Bourbon.

The search here began when New York officers wired that Schwarm is thought to be in hiding here.

Meanwhile, observers of the colorful adventures of the imaginative young romancer gave their attention to a series of letters written to him by "Princess" Lillian Vilkonerson of New York, whom he married and who believed his tales about himself implicitly.

LOVE LETTERS REVEALED.

The letters, which give evidence of considerable educational advantages on the part of the girl, follow in part:

A letter dated January 10, 1921, says:

"My Esteemed Emperor, Tai Chu Loon:

"Knowest not that the Princess is pleased beyond measure to receive the charming missive from the Sun of Heaven? It is with a heavy heart that this humble Tien Tao must relate to the greatest Master of all China what troubleth her soul.

"If Tien Tao has made her Emperor at all happy, or brought a ray of sunshine to his soul, it is indeed a great satisfaction to know that her efforts have not been in vain.

CONSTRAINED EMOTION.

"When the Princess first learned of the Emperor's unhappiness it immediately created a keen sensation of sympathy, with an intense desire to allay the pain of his aching heart.

"It is Tien Tao's mission in life to make every one happy, but your tale struck a very complicated chord in Tien Tao's heart.

"Tien Tao would give her all if she could but satisfy the Emperor and make him happy.

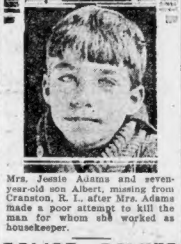
"You see, Tien Tao is very impulsive, very sympathetic, very affectionate (only a lot more so, if words could express it). The Princess is very like the real Lillian, but Lillian must never be her natural self.

"The only time either Tien Tao or Lillian is free to express her true emotional senses is in the aesthetic dance, when her inner soul is at liberty and freedom for expression.

"Does Emperor Tai Chu Loon fear that the Princess may care for someone else? There is no need to fear it, for it is not so, and by the help of Confucius, Jus and the rest of the yellow pedigrees of China, it never will be. (How would this be translated into Chinese: "Treue liebe bis zur grunde, schwer ich dir bei hand und hand.") Call Buddha to the rescue; I'm butchering his beautiful poem.)

"When you speak of going away," writes the Princess, January 13, 1921, evidently after a spat with her royal sweetie, "you make me so angry, I could pour alcohol down your back! If you ever tell me that again, you will lose the sunshine and the Princess will never, never speak to the Emperor again. Doleful Tien Tao."

Both Missing



Mrs. Jessie Adams and seven-year-old son Albert, missing from Cranston, R. I., after Mrs. Adams made a poor attempt to kill the man for whom she worked as housekeeper.

POLICE BALKED IN SEARCH FOR WOMAN

Providence, Aug. 14.—Thorough search of the city of Cranston and dragging of the Pawtuxet River by a squad of policemen has failed to reveal any trace of Mrs. Jessie Adams, thirty-eight-year-old mother who disappeared with her seven-year-old son, Albert, after an unsuccessful attempt to kill James B. Chatterly of Woburn street, Cranston.

Mrs. Adams, who called Chatterly to his door early Saturday morning and fired four poorly-aimed shots at him, left a note in her home saying that after slaying Chatterly she would kill her son and herself.

Chatterly for several years employed Mrs. Adams as a housekeeper in his Woburn street residence, where he lives with his wife and children. About a year ago, however, he had her arrested for coming to the home intoxicated and dismissed her from his service. He did not press the court charge against her, and she was discharged after a night in the police station.

Since that time Mrs. Adams has insisted that Chatterly wronged her and was loud in her threats of vengeance, according to the police. Below if the posses find the man.

TOURISTS EAGER TO SEE OSER STABLES

Zurich, Switzerland, Aug. 14 (By International News Service).—The stables formerly owned by Major Max Oser, middle-aged suitor of Miss Mathilde McCormick, seventeen-year-old granddaughter of John D. Rockefeller, are in interest today with historic William Tell's Zoch, especially on the part of American tourists. The "Lion of Lucerne" and "the horse that Mathilde rode while Major Oser was courting her" are two of the most stared-at animals in the Alp-land.

"Every day American tourists, mostly women, come to the academy and timidly ask to see the favorite horses that Major Oser and Miss McCormick rode," said Colonel Haegler, owner of the stable. "They stare for a long time, even at the empty stalls. One American girl asked if I had one of Major Oser's finger prints."

The doings of the McCormick family are much discussed in all circles. The men are copying Major Oser's style of riding dress, it may be with the faint hope on the part of bachelors of attracting a young American heiress.

The Hotel Dulac at Lucerne has added to its menu "Peaches a la McCormick."

Mathilde Will Not Wed Oser This Year

Geneva, Aug. 15.—Mathilde McCormick does not intend to marry Max Oser, her Swiss riding master, this year.

Reached in her Switzerland retreat by telephone, Mathilde gave the following official statement for publication:

"I will not be married this year as I had intended to. But my plans otherwise are in no way changed.

"My engagement to Max Oser is not broken. I am going to spend a vacation in the Swiss mountains and do not expect to return to America for a long time.

"I am as pleased as father is over his wedding.

"This is positively the last public statement that I shall make regarding my plans. I beg that the world will make me happy by forgetting my existence."

GRANDMA TWICE ON THE SAME DAY

Mrs. Mary Wesson of No. 50 Rockaway street, Lynn, is wearing a broad smile today. She has the unusual distinction of being a grandmother twice on the same day.

Sunday her daughter, Mrs. Rose Harrison of Francestown, N. H., gave birth to a nine-pound boy. Mrs. Wesson was rejoicing over the news when the telephone rang and an excited voice told her that her daughter-in-law, Mrs. John Wesson of No. 523 Chestnut street, Lynn, had presented her with another grandson.

FORBES' VIEWS ON FINANCE

By B. C. Forbes

The real wealth of a nation consists of:

First—Its people.

Second—Its resources.

In America, by restricting the growth of its wealth by drastically cutting down the influx of able-bodied immigrants, acting wisely or shortsightedly?

• • •

It will be pertinent to ask right at the start: Does America need more workers?

In my opinion the prosperity we are moving towards will be seriously hampered by two things: namely, railway congestion and scarcity of workers, especially common laborers.

• • •

Consider these facts:

During the five years ending in 1914 we received an average of 1,034,540 each year.

After deducting all who left the country, the net addition to our population was three-quarters of a million annually.

In the following five years, ending in 1919, the net gain averaged roughly 110,000 each year.

Since then, instead of doing anything to restore immigration, Congress passed a law which limited the maximum inflow in the fiscal year ended June 30 last to 356,898 and during the current fiscal year to 357,803.

And the restrictions are such that nothing like these numbers can be looked for—the actual arrivals last fiscal year were only 243,953, contrasted with 305,228 in the preceding year.

• • •

The probability is that the outflow of foreign-born workers will this year fall not very far short of the inflow.

• • •

Can we imagine Canada or Argentina or Australia or South Africa or any other partially-developed, under-populated, progressive country shutting the door in the face of healthy, sturdy, willing-to-work white toilers?

What would not Canada be eager to give for the acquisition of a third of a million industrious, broad-shouldered, horny-handed workers a year?

• • •

In view of all these facts and figures, are you also not inclined to conclude that we are likely to be handicapped and embarrassed by a scarcity of laborers when business tries to get under full swing?

Returns Over 25 per cent.

Question—I bought 10 each of Famous Players at 84, Mariand Oil at 39 and Worthington Pump at 49¾. For margin I put in $270. My carrying charge is at 6 per cent, under REK. My dividends amount to $160. I have a net after carrying charges of $78 a year, or over 25 per cent on my investment. Do you approve?

T. J., LYNN.

Answer—Your stocks are speculative; each has its large following. In July your Mariand was up to 54¾, now 48¾. Famous Players was $95, now up to $86, nearly balancing the Mariand decline. Worthington may prove the first sector of the three. I don't approve unless you can well afford to have your margin wiped out in case things go wrong.

To G. F. G., Quincy:

Pere Marquette has been in the limelight with new highs for 1922, but probably under pool manipulation. June earnings give latest sidelight on the line. In spite of the coal strike, in that month Pere Marquette gross was $3,304,993 comparing with $3,151,544 in June, 1921, increase of $153,449. Net of $700,448 compared with $451,932 in May and $497,629 in June, 1921.

For the first half of 1922 gross was $18,207,576, against $17,062,939 last year, an increase of $1,155,037. Net was $5,626,684, against $1,564,466, an increase of $1,062,218.

To L. W., Alistan:

It is true the stock of Lehigh Valley Coal Sales Company pays attractive dividends, but because of the fact that amount of dividends paid is dependent on business conditions as affecting business of selling coal, I class this stock as suitable only for a business man or for the investment of a small percentage of the capital of a woman in a position to assume business risks.

FAMOUS GIRL SWIMMERS ENTER FOR BIG WATER CARNIVAL

TO STRIVE FOR NEW RECORD

Indications That Classic 1-Mile Race Will Be Full of Surprises

South Boston sea queens expect to give a good account if themselves in the Boston American's annual water carnival in Charles River Basin Saturday afternoon, August 26.

WON THIRD LAST YEAR.

Another classy little swimmer who has entered for the big event is Delma Carlstrom of Worcester. Delma is fifteen years of age and won third prize last year. She is swimming stronger this season and says she is out to win first prize.

In addition to the one-mile swim there will be exhibitions of life saving and diving. Both men and women will appear in the diving exhibition. The American is arranging through officials of the N. E. A. A. U. to have some of the best women divers in New England present.

Every girl who completes the race will be presented a lovely bronze mermaid medal. The design has been completed and the medals will be ready in a few days. They are being made especially for the occasion. Each medal will make a lasting souvenir.

Twenty-six girls have already entered for the mile swim. Many more are expected to send their entries soon. The American expects the best field of girl swimmers ever assembled in New England will be present.

RECORD IN DANGER.

Indications are that the record of 32m. 27s., established by Miss Olive Holland, the nineteen-year-old Wollaston mermaid, will be broken. Olive is practicing faithfully every day in an effort to break her own record. She is using the crawl stroke and "flutter kick." This combination, she believes, enables her to glide through the water with least resistance. Other girls use different combinations. Each has her favorite.

Any girl who can swim one mile need not hesitate to enter. Even if she does not win one of the first five prizes she will benefit by the experience and she will have lots of fun swimming before a crowd of 150,000 spectators and hearing their plaudits. And don't forget the dandy bronze Mermaid Medal that goes to each and every girl who finishes the race, regardless of position.

Chicago, Aug. 14.—(By the Associated Press)—A memorial building with a giant dome supported by a ring of Grecian pillars will be the main structure to fix war dead of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks to be erected in Chicago. The national memorial headquarters commission of the lodge, which met in New York recently, decided on this kind of a structure and plans and specifications for the $2,500,000 home of Elkdom will be drawn within the next few weeks.

Political Notes

Charles A. Winchester, candidate for Registrar of Deeds, assailed the renomination condidacy of the present incumbent, William T. A. Fitzgerald, at a series of meetings in Dorchester. "Mr. Fitzgerald has held this office for sixteen years," he said. "Another term would make his tenure twenty-one years. It is time he stepped aside and let some young man have an opportunity to serve the public."

John J. Higgins, District Attorney of Middlesex County from 1908 to 1914, has announced his endorsement of the candidacy of Representative Arthur K. Reading of Cambridge for that office.

Joseph B. Ely, candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor, declared at a campaign meeting in Westfield that much of the present discontent among the ranks of labor is "due to class prejudice created by the circumstances of unwise Republican leadership." Mr. Ely added that, if the Republican leaders cannot quell this discontent, they should let the other party try it.

Joseph Walker, candidate for U. S. Senator on the Republican ticket, is commended and endorsed in a statement made public by Theodore Marburg, former American minister to Belgium. Mr. Marburg denounces Senator Lodge for his stand on the League of Nations, and declares he is the man, "next to Hohenzollern, who was responsible for bringing more misery on the world than any other living man."

Attorney-General J. Weston Allen, who is seeking the Republican nomination for Governor, has planned a busy campaign week. After making a swing through Essex county, he will go to Brockton and Norwood, and then back to Boston. Edward A. Thurston of Fall River, former chairman of the Republican State committee, has endorsed his candidacy, and will make a speaking tour for Mr. Allen during the latter part of the week.

District Attorney Thomas C. O'Brien, who is running for renomination, addressed a union meeting of longshoremen and reminded his hearers that he is at present an active member in the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen. He declared himself in hearty sympathy with organized labor, and asserted that he would "stand between the people and the powers that would crush them."

Peter J. Donoghue will open his campaign for the Democratic nomination for district attorney tonight, with three rallies in the Dorchester district. He has announced James T. Keaney of Dorchester as his campaign manager.

Eight women representatives of the Essex County Women's Republican Club started today on a four-weeks' tour of the State, during which they will make a canvass of women's clubs in the interests of the campaign. District Attorney S. Howard Donnell of Essex County is making for the Republican nomination for Attorney-General.

Mr. Donnell returned to his home in Peabody after a swing through the southern part of the State, during which he addressed a number of open-air meetings which were well attended despite a pouring rain.

Sherman L. Whipple, candidate for the Democratic nomination for United States Senator, started out on an intensive campaign tour through the western part of the State today. A "flying squadron" of twenty-five speakers accompanied him, and headed first for Pittsfield and North Adams. Among other towns that will be visited are Holyoke, Northampton, Springfield, Chicopee, Westfield, Ware, Palmer and Greenfield. Judge Thomas P. Riley of Malden was among the speakers who left to push Whipple's campaign.

Councillor Francis J. W. Ford, candidate for District Attorney of Suffolk County, declared that District Attorney O'Brien was a political charlatan," and asserted that he "has not the moral courage of a flea." He made his charges at a meeting of the Clover Club of Dorchester.

Terrance P. McSweeney, president of the Brockton Central Labor Union, will run as a candidate for United States Senator on the Progressive Labor ticket. Independent nomination papers will be circulated at once for McSweeney by the members of the Conference for Progressive Political Action, who are attempting to weld the farmer and labor vote in this State.

Characterizing Councilman Francis J. W. Ford, one of his opponents, as "a self-styled champion of the people's rights," District Attorney Thomas C. O'Brien today issued a challenge to Ford to meet him in public debates.

Former Governor Eugene Noble Foss, candidate for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination, will formally open his campaign tomorrow. His opening rally will take place at 1 o'clock in Pemberton square, with the "Old Boy" as the sole speaker.

CLAIMS EDISON OVERCHARGED AT STORE

Henry Bamber, a Causeway street haberdasher, today told the Boston American that although he used electricity but nine days during a three months' period, he was charged the maximum rate by the Edison Electric Illuminating Company and a bill for $31.23 rendered, coal clause and all.

"My bill should be really $19.63, although even that is excessive," he said. "I moved my place of business last May from No. 208 Friend street to 119 Causeway street. I notified the company to come and read the meter. The company came several times to read it, but told me they found the place locked up, and that therefore the service was not officially discontinued until July 23. This despite the fact they knew where I could be found.

"I have refused to pay the bill and will enter complaint to the Electric Light Commission. This is my idea of highway robbery, with painless extraction from a long suffering public."

FEAR TALKFEST AS CONGRESS ASSEMBLES

By International News Service.

Washington, Aug. 14.—As representatives began pouring in here today for the reassembling of the House tomorrow, congressional leaders on both sides of the Capitol were anxiously considering plans for some method of checking promiscuous debate on the industrial situation.

The leaders were frankly fearful that there may be an outburst of speechmaking from House members which would tend to complicate matters for President Harding and irritate an already bad situation. Aside from sporadic remarks during the consideration of the pending tariff bill Senators have carefully refrained from allusions to either the railroad or coal strike on the floor.

Administration Senators have been actuated by an expressed desire not to embarrass the President, although also heedful of his request, conveyed by Senator Cummins, Republican, of Iowa, chairman of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, and other Republican leaders with whom he has conferred lately, that the Senate do or say nothing unless he finds it necessary to call upon Congress to act. Even Democratic Senators, realizing the situation was loaded with political dynamite, have declined to comment publicly on it.

The House will face a different situation. There is little or nothing for the lower chamber to do until the tariff bill is out of the Senate and in conference. Idleness may encourage certain representatives to deliver speeches or propose remedial legislation.

URGE UNION MEN TO BE INDEPENDENT

Fitchburg, Aug. 14.—Declaring that trade unionists will no longer be led by political parties or machines, H. A. Russell of Springfield, reporting for a special committee at the twenty-seventh annual convention of the State branch of the American Federation of Labor, today urged union men to be independent in politics. Many delegates opposed a plan for the State branch to mix in politics, and after a long debate it was voted to appoint a committee of fifteen to investigate and report on the question Wednesday. Women delegates demanded and secured representation on the committee.

BURMAN, NOTED AUTO RACER, IS KILLED

Jackson, Mich., Aug. 14.—Earl P. Burman, twenty-two, of Detroit, automobile driver, is dead, following injuries received in the 200-mile race run in a collision during a race. Traveling 55 miles an hour, he ran into another machine which had stalled and his car was hurled 12 to 15 feet into the air.

R. J. Huebner, who had finished a five-mile race, had stopped on the track, when Burman, with another lap to go, came around the curve. He failed to see the other machine because of the dust. Huebner has been racing for six years.

BOY ELECTROCUTED IN WOOD PLANT

North Adams, Mass., Aug. 14.—Norman O'Neil, seventeen, employed in a wood-cutting plant here, was instantly killed today when his right hand came in contact with an electric switch carrying 1,300 volts. It is believed that a heavy belt passing overhead struck him, causing him to fall towards the death motor. In an effort to save himself he grabbed the charged switch. He leaves his parents and several brothers and sisters.

REDUCTION OF JAP ARMY STARTS

Tokio, Aug. 14 (By the Associated Press)—The reduction of the Japanese army in accordance with the reorganization plans proposed by the War Office and approved by the Cabinet recently, was begun today when 4,000 artillery men were disbanded. The retirement of several generals and other officers holding high commissions will be announced shortly, it was learned.

RINGS FIRE ALARM AS LIZZIE CUTS U.

If your flivver breaks down, call the fire department.

This, at least, seems to be the rule in Dorchester, where the whole division turned out to put a luckless Lizzie back on her feet on Columbia road. Joseph T. Smith of No. 16 Higgins avenue, Medford, driver of the car, said that in order to avoid hitting a boy he ran on the sidewalk, where the car turned turtle. In the excitement some bystander turned in the fire alarm.

JESSE MURPHY

AUGUST MORNS DISPORT IN LYNN POND

"Them white bathing suits are the flounder's fins, ain't they?" questioned Patrolman Mike Keenan of Patrolman Walter Maden, as the twain were rowing about Sluice Pond early today.

"White bathing suits your granny," said Patrolman Walter Maden to Patrolman Mike Keenan, taking out his trusty flashlight.

As they rowed to the scene two young women of Revere (their names are withheld) were applauding a couple of young men in the water. The swimmers were as bare as Mother Hubbard's cupboard. Blushing furiously, the two policemen ordered them to get into their clothes.

Going them one better, the two swimmers declined, pointing out that things had gone far enough. Patrolman Maden drew his revolver and started popping when the men began to swim for shore. This brought them to a stop. They waited for the coppers, and got into the boat, after the two girls had been ordered to tack to starboard.

The young Adoni were Richard Tewksbury and Norman A. Daw of Winthrop. They are to be arraigned in Lynn Court, and will undoubtedly get a good dressing.

WORM SALES PAY WAY THROUGH COLLEGE

Philadelphia, Aug. 14.—Paul A. Webb wanted to enter Allegheny College, which is situated in western Pennsylvania, but was rather short of funds. Reverting to a natural ability to gather fishing worms and "Webb ers," Webb went into the business in a legitimate way, and soon had sold enough to fishermen for bait to pay part of his expenses. So he engaged others to carry on his little business, and from the profits that he realized is able to pay his way through college. The worm has turned, as it were, in the fortunes of Paul A. Webb.

JESSE MURPHY ON WAY TO BOSTON

Jesse Murphy, gunman, stickup and confessed murderer, will be on his way to Boston today to face trial on two murder charges. Boston detectives will get Murphy from the Eastern Penitentiary at Philadelphia.

Here he will face charges of having murdered two Boston chain store managers.

His release from the Eastern Penitentiary constitutes a striking deviation from legal procedure.

It is believed to be the first time on record that a prisoner has been released by one State, holding him for one crime, to be tried in another State for another crime.

SHOT BANK MESSENGER.

Pennsylvania wanted Murphy almost as much as Massachusetts did. Murphy shot and robbed a bank messenger. He was serving a sentence of fifteen to twenty years in the Eastern Penitentiary when the Massachusetts authorities persuaded the Pennsylvania authorities to agree to turn him over to them.

The law of the land says that no man can be tried more than once for the same crime.

Hence, when Murphy leaves the Eastern Penitentiary today, he will go scot free.

It will be interesting to follow the progress of the case, as it is known Murphy has been only too willing to be released from the penitentiary.

He has expressed confidence that he would be able to slide out from under on the Boston murder charges.

Murphy says he is not sorry to go through with it now, it is too late to turn back.

NO GRANDSTAND.

Since his confession of the murder of Foley, Murphy has maintained it was no grandstand play.

From the viewpoint of a practical criminal Murphy spilled the beans on himself as the last of a long line of bonehead plays.

The prison farm in Cherry Hill from which he is pardoned to go to Boston was the scene of shooting and robbing a messenger of the Federal Reserve Bank in this city in 1917. He was caught napping after making a clean getaway.

The sentence was twelve years hard labor, but he served the mad man and was sent to the State hospital for the criminal insane. Sitting pretty, though his insanity was somewhat doubtful, Dr. William M. Lynch, superintendent of the hospital, he wrote a letter to Warden Moloney of the Eastern Penitentiary.

As he sealed the letter and licked the stamp, Murphy turned to another inmate and said: "There, if this line o' stuff don't make them think I'm suits they're cuckoo themselves."

WARD MATE SQUEALED.

The ward mate squealed and Murphy went back to the penitentiary. Before they sent him away he made the confession which saved Rollins.

Murphy got his good-byes off his mind during the Sunday special privilege hour.

"I tell you I ain't batty," he said to those who hinted that he had gone into a tailspin when he told on himself.

"If there's anything would spoil my sleep it would be to have that guy knocked off for something I done. That's what took me mind off me work and made me get grabbed the last time.

"That nut hospital was a nice comfortable place and if that man up there is in any other way able to convince the court here that he did not kill the two men, he will be free to continue his career in crime, which has been an extensive and violent one up to the time of his incarceration in the Eastern Penitentiary.

Accuses Husband

Mrs. John J. Elfman of Roxbury, who says she was beaten by husband while she was waiting for a car in Chelsea.

ROXBURY MAN IS HELD AS WIFE BEATER

Charged with beating his wife, John J. Elfman, twenty-seven years old, of No. 28 Clifford street, Roxbury, was arrested near the State Armory on Broadway, Chelsea. His wife, a frail little woman, was taken to the Chelsea Memorial Hospital, suffering from cuts and bruises said to have been received from the husband's fists. Mrs. Elfman has been separated from her husband for several months. She had been visiting friends in Chelsea with her two children and was waiting for a car when the husband attacked her. Two firemen separated them.

WILD AFRICA HAS NOTHING ON WARE

Ware, Aug. 14.—Ware, Jungle of New England!

Remember the alligator that all Ware hunted in Dismal Swamp, and that was finally captured and shot? Huh! That was nothing!

Right on top of it somebody found a six-inch tarantula on his porch. It was dispatched and a lot of papers took notice of it.

But that was only the overture. Today Mrs. Ernestine Suprenant, No. 48 Morse avenue, found a 37-inch adder coiled around a sugar bowl. Neighbors, aroused by her screams, killed it after an exciting chase.

There is a rumor that an animal resembling a tiger has been seen around the swamp. Only a rumor, folks. Wait.

STUDENT IS RUN OVER BY TRACTOR

Donald Earl, nineteen years old, of Melrose, a Brewster Academy student, is in a critical condition at the Higgins Hospital, Wolfboro, N. H., as the result of being thrown from a tractor. Earl was testing the tractor with a plow attached when the machine struck a rock. The impact threw him in the path of the tractor, and it ran over the lower part of his body, fracturing his leg near the hip.

LEVY MAYER IS FOUND DEAD IN HOTEL

Chicago, Aug. 14.—Levy Mayer, multi-millionaire member of the Chicago bar and one of the most noted corporation lawyers in the country, was found dead today by his valet, crouched on his knees at a window of his suite in the Blackstone Hotel. The body was clad in a dressing gown and slippers.

Dr. M. H. Wilkinson, house physician of the Auditorium Hotel, the first physician to reach the body, pronounced death due to heart failure.

Mr. Mayer returned to his suite from a trip in the country yesterday. He appeared in the best of health, with the exception of a slight pain in the back of his head, of which he had complained constantly.

NATIVE OF VIRGINIA.

Mr. Mayer was born in Richmond, Va., October 23, 1858, and graduated from Chicago High School in 1874. He took the law course at Yale and got his diploma in 1876. Returning to Chicago he became assistant librarian of the Chicago Law Institute.

He was the senior member of the famous law firm of Mayer, Mayer, Austrian and Platt, and represented some of the largest interests in the country.

It was Mr. Mayer who recently over the long distance telephone from Chicago, negotiated the purchase of a million dollar newspaper in Detroit for William Randolph Hearst. For years Mr. Mayer represented Mr. Hearst and Arthur Brisbane in important matters. He was also counsel for theatrical interests in Chicago.

As counsel for the packers Mr. Mayer smashed the famous beef trust indictments on the novel plea of the "immunity bath," his contention being that the packers had been forced through government seizure of their books, to give evidence that would be used to incriminate them.

BAY STATE SUMMER HOME.

He also was instrumental in securing the reversal of Judge Landis' $29,000,000 fine against the Standard Oil Company.

It is a well known political "secret" that it was Mayer who was in no small degree responsible for bringing about the nomination of President Harding at the Republican national convention in 1920.

Mr. Mayer occupied a floor at the Blackstone hotel in Chicago. But he did not partake of the Blackstone's cooking. A dumb waiter from the ice box of that hostlery to [illegible] provided the uncooked food which Mrs. Mayer often delighted in preparing for her husband's lunch.

He was a member of the Union League Club of Chicago, the Racquet Club of Chicago, the Bankers' and Lawyers' clubs of New York and of the Plymouth Country club of Massachusetts.

In addition to his handsome home in Chicago he maintained a summer home at Nantucket, Mass.

In 1920 Mr. Mayer was a member of the Constitutional Convention of Illinois and of the Illinois State Council of Defense.

GOT A COW AMONG YOUR LOOSE CHANGE?

Every policeman in Boston has his ear tuned today for the sound of a mooing cow.

When the second a moo is heard there will be a grand scramble and a "Wild West" scene will be staged.

All this because Nathan Cohen lost his cow. The cow escaped from the Brighton abattoir one night. It is black and white and is easy to see, says Nathan. All stations have been warned and the cow stopping scene may be expected at any time.

"Mary" ROMANCE OF A BOSTON BUSINESS GIRL

By ELENORE MEHERIN

I WAS a stenographer, young, eager for life like hundreds of others in Boston.

Hall Dawson was a coarse, brilliant, magnetic fellow —pleasure loving, ambitious.

I worked for this man two years.

He changed my life.

It is a strange, terrible thing that a man we meet in this chance contact of employer presently wins so compelling a power over our lives. And yet how commonplace.

My story is not unique, except that it is one of the few that are ever told. It could be paralleled in the experience of scores of girls. Whenever I see a laughing group chatting together I wonder how many of those smiling eyes are hiding memories, sorrows, poignant with bitterness as mine. I look into their bright faces and I remember that my face, too, wore a gay mask when my heart was sick with fear and my mind tired of struggle.

Hall Dawson was perhaps as helpless as I before the trifles that swung our destiny upon us. I remember the vague sense of alarm that gripped me the first time he spoke to me.

"You'll do," he said, his large, heavy eyes burning into mine. "Move in right away."

I was silent with foreboding. I felt as though I had stood at a half open door and caught a swift, terrifying glimpse of something fateful, ugly, within.

I had been working for him six months when that happened. I was twenty-one and had been four years in the business world when I left a lumber company to take a position as stenographer for Hall Dawson, promoter, at a salary of $90 a month.

His offices were on the top floor of a tall building on Water street. There were two rooms. Bert Esterly, assistant manager, with four of us in the outer office, took charge of the records, the filing, the bookkeeping. We typed contracts and answered routine letters. The "Big Bug," as we called Dawson, worked with his secretary, Rose Walker, in the great front room. Dawson paid no attention to us. He didn't seem to notice our existence.

FASCINATING MANNER

Before I had been there two weeks I began to associate him in my mind with mystery and romance. He had a vivid air about him as though he were the centre of an absorbing quick-moving world.

I used to envy Rose Walker, I was sure she didn't know how lucky she was. Rose was a tall, stunning creature. Every afternoon she drifted in to powder her nose at my mirror. She had a way of wetting her eyebrows with her fingers and lowering her voice for a confidence. "Mr. Dawson's awfully worried," she would say in an intimate, superior way, "He's got a big deal on," or "Mr. Dawson and I have just figured out a corking scheme," as though she were part of the firm. The other girls detested her.

I kept hoping she would leave. Maybe she would get a better job. Maybe I might be permitted to work in that fascinating private office. One day my opportunity came.

Quite breezily as though it were but a matter of taking a cup of tea, Rose informed us:

"I'm leaving," she put out her left hand. She was wearing a two-carat solitaire. "One of the men I met on that last railroad affair. We'll take a little jaunt West on our honeymoon."

I didn't sleep much that night. I wondered if I could be that lucky; if such a joyous thing could possibly happen to me; if Dawson might make me Rose Walker's successor.

There was Maidie Brown. Her desk was opposite mine. She was a very attractive girl with brown hair, bright skin and a large, winsome mouth. Maidie was efficient. She might get it.

Suppose a stranger should get it. That set me tossing for another hour.

It was a Wednesday, but I took out a fresh waist, severe, mantailored. I tried to keep my attention on the letters, but every time the door opened I glanced up fearfully. Rose's successor might be entering. I caught Maidie's eyes a dozen times. She lowered them hastily. Neither of us would have admitted our hopes.

It was nearly 13 o'clock when the door of the private office opened. Esterly came out from a two-hour session with Dawson. He stopped at my desk. My heart seemed to stop, too.

"Go inside, Miss Kelly," he said. "Mr. Dawson wants to see you."

I stood up trembling, picking up the pencils that rolled off my desk. Maidie watched me.

"Don't look as though it were your funeral, Mary. I'm glad it's not an outsider."

I could have cried I felt so bubbling with happiness, and yet my hands shook.

When I went into his office Dawson was sitting at a big mahogany, roller top desk, his pencil racing over a sheet of paper. He didn't notice me for five or ten minutes.

Dawson swung around.

"Oh, it's you, Miss Kelly." I was surprised at the music of his voice.

BRAINS ARE NEEDED.

"You're to take Miss Walker's place. I need brains here."

So that was it! A mere trick of luck. Dawson had bought an enormous amount of lumber and held it for speculation. He sold it at a fabulous profit. The contract was sent back for correction one afternoon when Rose Walker had left early. The other girls couldn't make head nor tail of the abbreviations. In desperation Esterly gave it to me. It was the very thing I had worked at for years.

"Oh!" I managed to get the word out, and it gave me courage. "Thank you. When do I start?"

He kept staring at me, a satisfied smile on his mouth—his eyes, they had never seemed so inquisitive greedy like, roved over my face.

"You'll do," he said, more to himself than to me. "Move in right away."

Maidie just said she was glad in a quiet, pleasant way. Iris got down from her desk. Poor little Iris—I never looked at her without a pang. She was like a warning of spinsterhood. She helped me put the letters and papers in a wire basket.

"You'll get along fine, Mary," she whispered. "I'm so glad it's you."

Dawson wasn't in his office much the first week. But the second I had a chance to see him in the hot throb of a new enterprise.

He was a human dynamo. He seemed propelled by some mighty, resistless energy that swept everything before it in the rush of its stupendous force. He was never still a moment. He walked up and down the room, his eyes blazing, his lips moving, dictating hundreds of letters. I could hardly keep pace with him. He sat at his desk running through scores of letters, pamphlets, contracts. Men came in to see him. He talked with an eloquence that made opposition ridiculous.

It was over. It was a success. By sheer brilliance of his scheming intelligence he had induced a millionaire who had offices on the same floor to take over and finance a young oil company he had organized six months before. Dawson had saved himself from bankruptcy.

"Mary, you little witch," he took out a check for $5,000 and showed it to me when the thing was finished, "you helped win that."

He sat on my desk, his hands on mine, his glowing eyes going like a torch over my face.

I felt abashed, irritated. I wanted to say something but it was like striking at a shadow.

Continued Tomorrow.

Tomorrow's instalment of this intriguing story will tell what happened when Mary visited the Ferncroft Inn.

GREAT FLEET SPEEDING COAL TO BOSTON FROM BRITISH MINES

PASSENGER SHIPS AID IN CRISIS

Supplies for Public Utilities Plants; 150,000 Tons Expected by Sept. 1

A 2,000-mile long procession of steamships, American, Scandinavian and British, stretching clear across the North Atlantic Ocean, is bringing tens of thousands of tons of coal to Boston from the mines in Wales and Cornwall to relieve the shortage of industrial coal in New England, caused by the miners' strike in this country.

Already some half dozen cargoes, ranging from 4,000 to 8,000 tons each, have arrived here, one coming Saturday, two yesterday and three previously. Four or five more big ships are due today and tomorrow, some ten or twelve more are already at sea and others loading at Shields, Newcastle, Newport and elsewhere in Great Britain.

Even passenger liners are loading coal for Boston, little other British cargo being offered just now, trans-Atlantic coal freights being high enough to make it an inducement for passenger ships to delay their sailing schedules to load coal.

FIRST COAL CARGO.

The Whitefriar, which sailed for Boston Saturday, two days behind schedule, was the first transatlantic liner ever to load other than in her bunkers. She has 7,000 tons of Welsh coal, transshipped at Liverpool from Tyne colliers. Other liners are also loading coal at present.

In addition to the British coal coming, the New England Fuel & Transportation Company is maintaining a regular service between Boston and Sydney, Cape Breton, bringing Nova Scotia coal to the Everett Gas Works.

It is estimated that not less than 150,000 tons of coal from England and Nova Scotia will have arrived in Boston by the first of September. This is, by long odds, the biggest international movement of coal that was ever undertaken in maritime history.

SUPPLY PUBLIC UTILITIES.

It is understood that the British coal is outside of the jurisdiction of local coal administrators. It is either consigned directly to public service corporations, such as railways, street railways, gas works and the like, or is consigned to brokers who sell by corporations who purchase it. it to concerns who can handle entire cargoes.

Very little of it is likely to find its way to small manufacturers or the public, except as they are served

In Romance

PETRONELLA VAN DEENE

Nineteen-year-old West Springfield girl, who won the love of prominent Dutch artist now in America. The latter is touring the world to win a $50,000 wager that he cannot complete his journey in three years, paying his way by selling his paintings. He was recalled to Holland recently, where he painted the portrait of Queen Wilhelmina.

BAY STATE GIRL BETROTHED TO DUTCH ARTIST

Springfield, Aug. 14.—A romance of the old and the new world was revealed here today when the engagement was announced of Petronella Van Deene, 19-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gerrard Van Deene of No. 385 Park street, West Springfield, to Jacques Monnikenban, a prominent Dutch artist.

The artist only returned from Holland on Thursday after painting a portrait of Queen Wilhelmina, Holland's famous ruler.

The artist first came to America in May of this year. He made his home with the Van Deenes and one of his first works was to paint the daughter of the house.

The visit to Springfield was part of a world-wide tour in which the artist was engaged. Should he complete the tour in three years, working his way by his painting, he is to receive a prize of $50,000 offered by a leading Dutch merchant.

RAIL PARALYSIS IN FAR WEST GROWS

A dynamite explosion damaged the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad bridge across the Sac River at Ash Grove, Mo. The north abutment of the structure was destroyed.

Twenty locomotives destroyed by fire in roundhouse at Portland, Me.

Twenty-five persons injured at North Bergen, N. J., when West Shore passenger train was rocked by explosions.

At Roseville, Cal., where 600 men walked out, including members of the "Big Four" brotherhoods, five bombs were thrown in the South Prospect road yards. Rolling stock escaped serious damage.

Chicago, Aug. 14 (By the Associated Press).—Further paralysis of rail transportation in the Far West and at least two instances of serious violence against railroad property marked the opening hours of the seventh week of the strike of rail shopcrafts workers.

Northern and Central California today were without fast freight transportation East, and indications were the sole remaining passenger route also would be abandoned. Upward of 700 passengers were marooned on nineteen trains abandoned in Arizona, New Mexico and California deserts by members of the operating brotherhoods.

MAIL SERVICE HAMPERED.

Many cities of California's San Joaquin Valley were without mail service as a result of cessation of transportation, and eastern mail, halted in Southern California Thursday, still was unmoved.

Fruit growers estimated their accruing losses at a million dollars a day and one shipper professed his loss reached $1,000 daily.

President Harding's proffer of unstinted Federal aid for passengers suffering on trains stalled in the humid Arizona wastes had met ready response early today, as Governor Campbell of Arizona, to whom the Chief Executive's telegram was sent, sent Colonel Walter S. Ingalls to Seligman. Passengers marooned at Albuquerque, N. M., telegraphed President Harding urging he take command of the situation.

Reports of instances of personal violence to workers who have replaced those who went on strike showed the usual Sabotal infrequency, but for the first time attacks of magnitude were made against railroad property.

JERSEY TRAIN BOMBED.

Lives of passengers were endangered and ten persons were injured when a passenger train loaded principally with women and excursionists was bombed at Granton Junction, N. J. Steel coaches, which were marked victims of previous bombs, served as veritable bombproofs in protecting the passengers.

At Ash Grove, Mo., the St. Louis & San Francisco's 400-foot bridge over the Sac River was dynamited. The north abutment was destroyed, according to early and fragmentary reports, and for quite a distance the tracks were raised a foot.

U. S. May Be Forced to Take Over Roads

Washington, Aug. 14.—Standing at the cross roads of action and surveying the wreckage of peace efforts in all directions, a growing number of administration officials held the conviction today that eventually the Federal Government would be reluctantly compelled to take over the nation's great railroad systems if the public is to escape acute suffering this winter.

Hope for a peaceable adjustment of the railroad strike, now in its seventh week, hung only by the slenderest of threads today. This thread was represented by the continued presence in Washington of the leaders of the Big Four brotherhood who have undertaken to mediate the differences between the roads and the 300,000 strikers of the six federated shopcrafts.

The railway executives have left the capital after turning down two offers of adjustment, one proposed by President Harding, the other by the men and they left a deep cloud of pessimism behind them.

Overcome by Heat on Marooned Train

San Bernardino, Cal., Aug. 14 (By the Associated Press).—A Santa Fe relief train carrying 125 passengers, many still suffering the effects of the terrific heat of the desert, arrived here from Needles after four days delay when train service men refused to proceed. Santa Fe officials manned the relief train.

A physician and a nurse boarded the train here to treat J. M. Norris, aged ninety-one years, Los Angeles, who was overcome by the heat.

"Grandma" Malissa Wooden, aged ninety-four years, and traveling alone from the East to her home in Berkeley, Cal., was smiling when the train arrived here, although weak.

Mr. and Mrs. William Hebree of Denver, Col., traveling to San Diego, worked day and night to save their eighteen-month-old baby. A woman's organization finally secured milk for the baby.

The temperature in the Pullman cars registered 130 degrees during the days.

Society to Aid Children's Hospital With Fete, Says Betty Alden

By BETTY ALDEN.

TODAY is the day of the Old-Fashioned Garden Party at the estate of Mrs. T. Jefferson Coolidge, Coolidge Point, Manchester, given by the C. H. Clubs of the North Shore in aid of the Children's Hospital, Boston. The clubs have arranged a delightful program. Roshsmara, the artist, has trained the children for the pantomime, and Mrs. C. P. Curtis, Jr., has charge of the youngsters taking part in "Little Black Sambo."

Among these children are Sally and Anita Curtis, Charles and Gladys Amory, Harvey Bundy, Jr., William Harrison and Charlotte Denny. The Misses Frances Weld and Grace Sargent will give vocal numbers. The Misses Mary Post, Gertrude Russell, Mary Hopkinson, Frances Hutchinson, Agnes Boardman, Cynthia Means and Harriet Hopkinson are in a charming quadrille, followed by a trio including Jean Hopkinson, Isabella Hopkinson and Lorraine Warner.

Pantomimes are to be given by the Misses Gabriella Ladd, Edith Shober and Jane Noble, and an old-fashioned polka by all the performers. Miss Vernon Ladd will take the part of the town crier.

Mrs. F. M. Whitehouse is in charge of the tea at 5 o'clock, and the different tables selling sweets, delicatessen, cake and grabs are in charge of Mrs. Bernard C. Weld and Mrs. Robert Means, two of the younger matrons of the Shore.

EVERYONE agrees that one of the loveliest families summering at the Shore is that of Mr. and Mrs. Sewell Fessenden of Coolidge Point, Manchester. The family is comprised of Mrs. Oliver Ames, Jr. (Caroline Fessenden), and her young daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick W. Busk (Harriet Fessenden), Miss Rose Fessenden, whose engagement to Henry Bigelow was recently announced, and Miss Louise Fessenden, who, like her sisters, is very pretty. She was the leading lady of the last Vincent show. She has very blond, fluffy hair, and vivid coloring. There is also a son, S. H. Fessenden, Jr.

Mr. and Mrs. Fessenden, and the latter's sister, Mrs. Charles M. Hammond, who is spending the Summer in her home in Chestnut Hill, have gone to Breton Woods, N. H., for a few weeks.

"SUNNYBANK," Gale's Point, Manchester, will be the scene on Wednesday of the wedding of Miss Pauline Croll, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Ivins Croll of No. 324 Beacon street, to Ensign S. S. Stevens, son of Mrs. Frederick C. Stevens of Washington. The wedding is to be very simple one, followed at 1:30 by an informal reception.

Miss Croll will be attended by her little niece, Pauline De Fries, daughter of Mrs. Thaddeus C. De Fries, and Mr. Stevens will have for his best man his brother, Frederick C. Stevens. "Sunnybank" is the beautiful Summer home of the Crolls.

MR. AND MRS. LLOYD NICHOLS (Helen Hart) of Beverly Farms spent last week-end at New London, Ct. Mrs. Nichols was among those having bridge tables last Tuesday at the Marlshead Neck home of Mrs. Henry P. Benson for the benefit of Russian refugees. Tea was served afterwards at the home of Mr. Nichols' mother, Mrs. Wendell Nichols.

The Nicholses have a tennis court at their home in Beverly Farms, which is very popular among the young married set, and which is crowded with players, with an enthusiastic audience daily.

AMONG those present at Miss Virginia Wainwright's entertainment on the North Shore at the home of Mrs. B. Sumner Welles (Esther Slater) beautiful home in Manchester were Mrs. Francis M. Whitehouse of Manchester, Mrs. George Lee of Beverly Farms, Mrs. Eugene Foster of Magnolia, who brought Miss Williams as her guest; Miss Harriet Welles of New York, Miss Kathleen Crawford of New York, and many others. Miss Wainwright was a house guest of Mrs. Welles at the time of the entertainment, which was a great success.

The audience was very enthusiastic, as usual, over Miss Wainwright's performance. She gave a reading of humorous poems and short stories from classical and modern authors, and she included a few original selections from her own poetry and prose.

Tomorrow Miss Wainwright's humorous reading takes place at the Manchester Town Hall. Prominent Boston and North Shore society women are patronesses, as they have been during the past years, when many of them have opened their lovely homes for her entertainments.

MRS. GEORGE LEE left Beverly Farms last Friday for a week's visit at York Harbor, Me.

Mrs. Huntington Wolcott Frothingham of New York has been visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Lee, at Beverly Farms, and will stay there until late Fall, when she returns to New York for the Winter. Her little daughter, Millie Turner, has been with her grandparents for the whole Summer.

BALFOUR NOTE ATTACKED BY HOUSTON

By JAMES K. POLLOCK.

Williamstown, Aug. 14.—America must pursue her own course, proudly, confidently, unswayed by the praise or blame for her actions emanating from Europe, David F. Houston, Secretary of the Treasury under President Wilson, said today at the Institute of Politics.

The speaker criticized those who attacked the United States for her refusal to cancel the war debts, and asserted the Balfour note was intended to put the United States in a bad light regarding the question of inter-allied debts. He said the United States cannot achieve any constructive financial policy while attempting to follow six different economic directions at once.

PUTS US IN BAD LIGHT.

"It isn't helpful to picture to the world that the United States by refusing to cancel the debts is standing in the way of Europe's recovery and I wish that Lord Balfour's views had been held within the councils of European chanceries," he said.

"It will not avail anything to assert that if there is any reduction in the indemnity figure the United States must help to make up the difference by cancelling her loans.

"It will not help to say we ought to cancel debts because we did not enter the war sooner. That decision was for us alone to make.

CANCELLATION PROBLEM.

"At present the discussion of cancellation is purely academic. The official and popular sentiment is overwhelmingly against it. The existing law is against it. The present debt commission cannot cancel the debts and unfortunately its legal instructions are such as to make it impossible for it to take wise and necessary action."

Mr. Houston said that in her present condition Europe cannot pay either principal or interest on the debt without serious detriment to herself and America, for the latter cannot extend foreign trade and receive payment at the same time.

One reason for Europe's financial plight was laid by Houston to a mild system of taxation.

OXFORD DEBATERS TO VISIT HARVARD, YALE

Oxford, Eng., Aug. 14.—Three representatives of the Oxford Union, the great debating society of Oxford, will visit several American universities in September. Since the war New York University and Bates College have sent debating teams to Oxford and the forthcoming tour will be Oxford's return visit. The visitors will include W. M. Lindsay, a former president of the union, E. Marjoribanks, and M. C. Hollis. Their itinerary includes the universities of Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Cornell, Columbia, New York and Bates and Swarthmore colleges.

THORE OFFERS NEW OLD-AGE PENSION PLAN

A petition to establish a State-wide system of old-age pensions for needy and deserving citizens was filed today with Attorney-General Allen by Wendell P. Thore, father of the old-age pensions demand.

Thore filed with Allen an initiative petition for a constitutional amendment which would enable the legislature to pass an adequate old-age pension law which would be constitutional beyond all doubt. Thore's purpose is to have the amendment submitted to the people for their acceptance.

Thore announced today, for the first time, that Allen recently rejected an old-age pension bill submitted for his approval. Although the Initiative and Referendum law provides that petitions must first be submitted to Allen for his approval as to their legal form, Allen rejected Thore's bill because, in his opinion, it was unconstitutional and he then refused to give Thore any satisfactory explanations.

If Allen persists in holding up the new petition, Thore demands that he state his objections in writing in order that Allen's attitude may be [illegible] before the people.

The new Thore petition provides that any woman who has attained the age of sixty or man of sixty-five, without sufficient income or property to guard against want shall not be allowed to suffer. The applicant for the pension must give proof of need. The Legislature is empowered to provide that the applicant must have resided several years in the State.

Among the signers of the Thore petition are Representatives Russell T. Bates of Quincy, former Senator James H. Brennan, former representative Thomas A. Niland, Joseph [illegible] Christopher D. Thore of Everett, John Lawrence Hurley of Malden, Governor's Councillor William J. Foley, [illegible] Walsh, Miss Marie E. C. Shannon, Charles R. McCarthy, former Representative Louis Orenberg and William Callahan of Boston and Samuel Harris of Revere.

MIAMI-BARBADOES CABLE IN OPERATION

Miami, Fla., Aug. 14.—The Miami-Barbadoes Western Union cable, long the subject of dispute between the government and the cable company, was in operation today between Miami and Pernambuco, via Barbadoes. Permission for the splicing of the connecting link was given Saturday by President Harding and the connection was made yesterday. Opening of the new service is expected to materially relieve the congestion of European traffic created by the seizure of a number of cable terminals in Ireland by the irregulars.

The Test of Good Will

Most manufacturers appreciate the importance of good will on the part of the dealer, and count it one of their greatest assets. But many of them need to consider more thoroughly in what good will consists.

The final test of good will is the salability of the product—the consumer demand.

The dealer may be willing to concede the high standing and prestige of the manufacturer. He acknowledges freely that it is one of the foremost concerns in the business, that it is backed by men who have a solid reputation in their industry, and that its relations with the dealer are businesslike and pleasant. He is disposed to estimate all these things at full value.

But all this good will cannot materially help the dealer sell your goods unless the public is disposed to buy them.

The kind of good will that counts most with the dealer is the good will of the public towards your goods.

If the consumer is demanding your product, and the dealer is able to supply it at a profit, he will have ample good will for the house that makes this possible.

There is just one way to build up this consumer good will, and that is by making the product right and telling the consumer about its merits through Advertising.

With the consumer demanding your product, and the dealer disposed to give it every preference, its steady sale is certain. Good will becomes a big reality in business when that good will extends to the consumer. More and better advertising will create the kind of good will that every manufacturer needs most.

ROSENBERG AND KRUG IN JOKE BATTLE FOR WILSON'S TITLE

CHAMP BEGINNING TO SHOW SIGNS OF LIFE

By JACK CONWAY.

Dave Rosenberg and Phil Krug will battle for the middleweight championship of the New York Boxing Commission's Hall of Fame in a fifteen-round match at the Velodrome, New York, this evening. The learned gentlemen who misdirect ring affairs in the Empire State will be at the ringside to crown the victor with some sort of a title.

Maybe the winner will be hailed as king of the unknown. Anyhow the noble Commish is all stirred up over the affair. It is going to teach Jawn Wilson and Harry Greb a lesson.

The "title" battle tonight is the result of Wilson's suspension in New York. The Commish decreed that Jawn of Charlestown fight Harry Greb or cash in on his title. Jawn didn't fight. So Greb was proclaimed middleweight champion and ordered to defend his honors against Dave Rosenberg.

"Do you think I'm a comedian, signing to fight an unknown," shrieked Greb.

"We said FIGHT," shouted back the Commish.

Greb was so unkind as to laugh. The Commish then called a special meeting and in a dignified session stripped Pittsburgh Harry of his championship.

"Now Rosenberg and Krug (whoever he may be) will battle for the title," replied the Commish.

So, boys, hold onto your seats as the great battle is on for tonight.

Hooray for the Commish!

Killilea Says a Few Things About Greb

And in the midst of the excitement, Marty Killilea, manager of Wilson, penned the following:

"Dear Jack:

"Why doesn't Harry Greb accept Johnny Wilson's challenge? The big quitter is afraid. For seven months Greb has been abusing Wilson and when Wilson accepts he suddenly becomes as quiet as 'Silent' Martin. Mike O'Dowd did that, too, and when Wilson got the harp in the ring he made him quit and yell foul. He will make Greb do the same thing. Greb isn't game enough to fight Wilson and I'll prove it.

"When Tex Rickard saw that he couldn't club me into going through with an illegal contract he had Wilson suspended, despite the fact that guarantees are forbidden in New York and our contract called for $40,000. Let Rickard explain that. Now that Wilson is reinstated in Massachusetts, I challenge Greb to fight Wilson in Boston for his title or ours. If he can't make the middleweight limit, Wilson will fight him at 175 pounds.

"The buck is up to you, Mr. Greb, either fight or quit. You won't fight, you'll quit."

Rather unkind, we'd say.

* * *

"How do you like this kind of weather?" we asked Dave Sullivan of the Boston American's advertising department Saturday.

"Why worry about something you can't control," replied Dave.

* * *

Hambone Kelly continues to hurl broadsides at Johnny Wilson. Kelley has never fought in a main bout and yet there are people who think he would have a chance of knocking Wilson out. Hambone can punch, say these gentlemen while Wilson has a glass jaw.

* * *

Wouldn't it be funny if a pre-Luminary boy like Kelly stepped right out in front and grabbed a world's championship?

* * *

Pond says nothing is impossible. He ought to know.

* * *

Eddie Shevlin went to the City Hospital Friday to be treated for boils. If the Shevlin Ward match had been postponed another day, the Roxbury professor could not have gone through with the tussle. If he had fought under such conditions, he would have lost. This writer was tipped that Shevlin was not in as good condition Thursday as he had been in on Monday and Tuesday. This is why we shifted our selection from Shevlin to Ward. The attack of boils from which Eddie is now suffering shows that our information was correct.

* * *

Moral—If you want the "inside" fight news, trail along with the Boston American.

* * *

Leo Flynn is shrieking about wanting to match Dave Shade with Shevlin. Leo will get the same consideration he gave Billy Henderson when the latter tried to get a Madison Square Garden booking for Shevlin.

* * *

Young Kloby wants to knock somebody out in a regular fight. The Lawrence welterweight, who hasn't won a bout since the ring game was made legal in Massachusetts, showed in an exhibition with Jack Dempsey Saturday.

* * *

Kloby was a great success as a fighter when he could pick his opponents and name the referee. Conditions have changed with a boxing commission.

Twilight Clubs Must Obey Rules

President Claude Davidson announces that any Greater Boston Twilight team using or slipping in any ball players without waiting for the five-days' approval of the League officials will be fined heavily and also forfeit such game to the opposing nine.

It has been rumored that some of the league teams are to rop an eleventh-hour sneak with the hope of landing on top for the big series due in a few weeks.

President Davidson says that the rules and regulations of the league have been obeyed with the greatest honor and sincerity.

BUNKER HILL ROVERS ARE REAL HUSTLERS

There is a budding little bunch of ball tossers in the sand lot league of Charlestown under the name of the Bunker Hill Rovers. This team is out scrapping for opponents of the twelve to thirteen-year-old diamond title of the State. Manager Allard states that to date they have met with no defeats and on the other hand they have garnered eighteen victories. In some cases the other teams were much older.

Edward Allard

Charlie Harrington is captain of this snappy little outfit when on the diamond and for a wee slip of a youngster he is considered one of the best in and around Bunker Hill. The Rovers wish to hear from those who call themselves champions in their class. Managers may communicate with Edward Allard, Chas. MISS BANCROFT MAY DETHRONE 'MOLLA'

New York, Aug. 14.—The women's national championship opens this afternoon at the West Side Tennis Club, Forest Hills, L. I.

A total of thirty-eight matches will be played today so that by nightfall the first two rounds of the singles will have been completed.

An examination of the entry made after the draw was announced showed a surprisingly good representation of the best women tennis players in the country.

With Miss Leslie Bancroft of the Longwood Club, Boston, Mrs. Marion Zinderstein Jessup of Wilmington, Mrs. May Sutton Bundy, of Los Angeles and Miss Helen Wills of San Francisco all trying for the championship, it is apparent that Mrs. Mallory will face the most spirited competition in her defense of the championship this year.

Miss Bancroft is, in the opinion of many tennis followers, the one who has the best chance to overcome the champion.

Miss Bancroft has had an exceptionally fine year thus far, bowing to nobody but the champion on two occasions, and Mrs. Jessup on another.

In each match Mrs. Mallory had little difficulty with the Boston player, but it must be added that in each of their encounters Miss Bancroft outgeussed her opponent with beautifully placed drives down the side lines.

Psychology, more than anything else, has caused the setbacks sustained by Miss Bancroft at the hands of Mrs. Mallory, according to the belief of certain sport lovers.

The Boston player has admitted that the champion, when opposed by her, is never able to put forth her best efforts. If she could master her fears she should be able to jump into the place now occupied by Mrs. Mallory.

FLAPPER HAS FLOPPED WAY INTO BASEBALL

New York, Aug. 14.—It's happened at last!

The wave of modernism that took the women out of the kitchens into politics, made the flapper what she is today, has inundated that last stronghold, baseball, as far as first base.

"Yes," mused Manager Miller Huggins of the Yankees, today, taking puffs the while from his old faithful corncob pipe, "the modern tendency has entered even baseball.

"There was a time when a girl wouldn't go alone to a game. But now that its quite the thing for them to go to restaurants and dance halls and other public places unescorted, they are beginning to come also to baseball games.

"It's a good thing in a way. Men don't care much how the stands look, but with women an ever prominent part of the audience, we've come under her purifying influence and pay more attention to keeping things clean and more attractive at a game."

An attempt to steal second will put this new tendency out, however, Huggins thinks.

"Fundamentally, baseball appeals to those instincts in men and women that are elemental," he said. "While people love clean sport, thrilling action, beautiful exhibitions of athletic power and lightning decisions, in short while they love to play ball, the game won't change greatly. Perhaps when human nature changes, baseball may change."

BIG GOLF SCANDAL THREATENED ON EVE OF TITLE PLAY

U.S.G.A. TO HURL OUT 'MONEY MAKERS'

Many golfers are wondering if the United States Golf Association will explode a long-expected bomb which will blow some of the prominent amateur golfers out of their unsecure places among those who do not golf for gain. It is said that a few suspects are due for a toss out of the amateur ranks before the great national amateur championship tournament to be held at the Country Club, Brookline, next month.

The United States Golf Association has been altogether too charitable in dealing with the amateur question. When the situation reaches such a point that hundreds of golfers every where comment on the brazen manner in which some players violate the spirit of amateurism without having their standing affected, it is time that the United States golf association took action.

* * *

Officials of the United States Golf Association know what is going on in the world of golf. They know the names and habits of the leading players and in private conversation with one another, could come very close to selecting a list of those who should be barred, which would be representative and which would not be questioned by the followers of the sport.

* * *

Some of the offenders are American born and some are foreigners. They do not give golf lessons. They do not play in exhibition matches for hire, but they have many wired. But not altogether free of the methods of turning their abilities as golfers to their financial gain.

When the association was busy barring the steel shaft from championship competition it could have used the time to better advantage by barring a few of the so-called amateurs.

It is known that the United States Golf Association has a number of players under investigation and their case will be an explosive. It is certain that the U. S. G. A. is not going to stand for these semi-professionals longer and ever.

No Place for Pros Parading as Amateurs.

Golf is getting to be a tremendous racket. It is a profitable business for any skilled golfer who wishes to take up the game as a profession. This is what all good players who seek to become famous through golf in the world of sport profess to be. They should not be allowed to use their skill as players as their principal means of making a living and, at the same time, masquerade as amateurs.

* * *

It is hardly just to expect the bona fide amateur who has only time for golf to match his skill against players who have so regulated their lives that they are able to play almost daily.

* * *

The amateur golf championship should be reserved for those players who enjoy golf as a pastime and do not make an industry of their playing, and figure upon the amateur championship as a great business opening.

If the United States Golf Association does not bar a few of this sort it will add zest for those who understand, for the real amateurs will be struggling to keep the title in the glamorous ranks of the genuine amateurs.

* * *

The Brookline championship will have many elements to make it bold, exciting and interesting than ever held.

LYNCH CANNOT PLAY FOR GREEN

By CHARLES E. PARKER

A blow has been dealt Dartmouth football plans by the announcement that Eddie Lynch, star end for the past two years, will not be available for a while. Lynch is counted upon to [illegible] of the fingering illness that at any time may prove fatal, and her no can not see his way clear to leave for college while there is need for him at home.

Eddie Lynch

Without Lynch as a candidate two new wingmen must be developed, and as Harvard must be encountered in October, preparing inexperienced ends for that fray will prove quite a problem.

Lynch is a remarkable football player, not carrying any great poundage, the Dartmouth man seemed to succeed upon in all departments of play. He was particularly effective as a defensive end and as a receiver of forward passes.

It was the Roberts-to-Lynch aerial that enabled the Green to make such a remarkable showing against the University of Washington team, and it was that same play that won for the Hanoverians their contest with the University of Georgia.

A similar development in Lynch's career at Hanover came in the fact he failed to make either a regular or substitute position on his freshman team.

The freshman coach of that year passed Lynch up completely, and included him in the first group to be dropped from the squad. Despite such a disheartening start, however, Lynch reported for the varsity eleven the following year and not only surpassed his freshman rivals, but won a first string position from an experienced varsity player.

Lynch was a candidate for the varsity captaincy last Fall, but asked that his votes be turned over to "Chick" Burke, a rival candidate, but his closest pal at Hanover.

According to this announcement Lynch's career to which the gridiron star devoted [illegible] of [illegible] that at any time may prove fatal, and her no can not see his way clear to leave for college while there is need for him at home.

TOTH READY TO START IN CHANNEL SWIM

By P. A. WRAY.

Dover, Eng., Aug. 14.—"Give Charlie Toth just ordinary decent conditions and he will swim the English Channel for a certainty." That is the considered opinion of Jack Weidemann, ex-British champion long distance swimmer, wisest pilot on the coast, and the man who guided Burgess in his victory in the channel swim.

Charlie Toth

"Toth, the Boston swimmer, is the best natural long distance fan who has ever started from Shakespeare Cliff, Dover," says Weidemann. "Once that man gets in the water hell never quit. I shall let him go his own gait. He won't be hurried or worried. But between twenty and twenty-four hours after he leaves Dover, he will be hugging one of those rocks off Cape Gris Nez, in France.

"I don't worry very much about the tides where he is concerned. The only thing I fear is the southwest wind which pursued me when he was ready for the attempt between July 31 and August 3. No swimmer can hope to cross in face of that.

"I estimate that he will swim between forty-five and fifty miles in crossing, although the distance, as the crow flies, is only twenty-one miles. For two tides he will be driven clear off his course but on the third tide he will hit France.

"This channel swim cannot be estimated according to any American standard. The swimmer has to cross in the choppiest water in the world, and deadly cold at that. I shall be surprised and delighted if we can start when the water is 60 degrees.

"But I very much fear that we shall not get a better temperature than 58. And anyone who can stand over twenty hours of sea buffeting in water as cold as this needs phenomenal powers of endurance.

"August 16 is the date I have set my mind on going. I shall be with Charlie in the water. Accompanying him will be two motor boats with newspaper men and trainers. My business will be to set his course and to save unnecessary swimming.

"While in the water he will be fed on orange juice—to take the taste of the salt water out of his mouth—white of egg, soup and bananas if he feels he needs them. He will take no solid food of any kind and, of course, no stimulant.

"During his stay here Charlie has made himself one of the most popular men in the town. His modesty and good nature have endeared him to everyone in the place, and he will take off with him the heartiest good wishes."

MISS URSPRING BEATS THREE SISTERS

New York, Aug. 14.—The clan Delaney—Elaine, Dorothy and Grace—thought they were staging a private battle in the aquatic sports in the Ergaton Beach pool, when an outsider, Ethel Ursprung, came along and spoiled the day for them by winning first honors.

The event was the 100-yard dash handicap, in which each sister won a heat and qualified for the final.

The midget race for mermaids eleven years and younger was won by ten-year-old Edna Leonard, second honors won to nine-year-old Julia Marmorstein. Frances Meany, third.

At water polo the New York A. C. stars defeated a team of all-college men, 10 to 0. Dondeon starred for the collegians by scoring three thrown goals, which accounted for all nine of the locals tallies.

McGrath says this story happened in New Orleans:

When Corbett defeated Sullivan there was an interesting incident that, so far as I know, has never found its way into the papers.

McAuliffe, as I said, was a born gambler, and he was a close friend of Sullivan—so close that he was one of Sullivan's seconds in the fight with Corbett.

When McAuliffe whipped Meyer he received the entire purse, for they were fighting winner take all, and poor Meyer, didn't receive a cent.

McAuliffe took the money he thus won and placed it in Roche's hand.

"There you are, Dick," he said, "$20,000; bet it on the big fellow."

Roche, who was a very shrewd gambler, started to protest. "Better go easy, Jack," he said. "Sullivan isn't as good as he was. He's getting old, and Corbett, they say, is a wonderfully clever fellow."

"That's all right," said McAuliffe. "John will never be able to say that I was afraid to bet on him when I had the money."

When the fight was over, and Sullivan was whipped, Mc Auliffe went to Roche and said:

"Dick, I'm a pauper; you will have to pay my way back to New York."

Roche reached in his pocket and pulled out a bank roll—the same roll that McAuliffe had given him to bet.

"There you are, Jack," he said. "I used my own judgment and didn't use the bet. They wanted me to give odds of 4 to 1 and I didn't think Sullivan looked good enough to make that kind of bet on him."

McAuliffe turned away sadly. "Very well, Dick," he said "you keep the money, it's not mine."

Roche followed McAuliffe, insisting that he take the money. McAuliffe didn't take it then, but I suppose he did later.

WILLS STARTS TRAINING FOR JACKSON

New York, Aug. 14.—Harry Wills, the colored challenger of Jack Dempsey, will start real training today for his coming fight with Buddy Jackson next Monday night at the Newark Armory.

This will be a twelve-round bout and the winner will be recognized as the colored heavyweight champion of the world. Wills does not intend to be caught napping, for he is going to fight the most dangerous opponent that could possibly be selected.

Jackson has done no fighting around this part of the country.

GENE DELMONT IN WORCESTER GO

One of the largest crowds of the season should attend the bout between Gene Delmont of Memphis and George "Kid" Lee of Worcester at Casino Hall, Worcester, Friday night. The two will battle in the feature bout of ten rounds under the auspices of the Lake A. C.

Delmont is a boxing in great form. His recent victory over Johnny Shugrue at Jersey City in a great twelve round battle and the showing he made against Vincent Martin at the Boston Arena a month ago has put him in line for matches with the leading boxers in the lightweight ranks.

Gene Delmont.

Lee is undertaking a hard task in tackling such an experienced boxer as Delmont but the Worcester lad wants to advance and has consented to meet the aggressive and two fisted gent from Memphis.

Matchmaker Harry Wright has surrounded his feature bout with a strong preliminary bill consisting of two eight round bouts and a six between local boys.

HORNSBY'S TOWNIES ROOTING FOR HIM

Wichita Tex., Aug. 14.—The little Texas village, birthplace of Rogers Hornsby leading home run hitter of the National League, is much perturbed as its idol runs second to Ken Williams of the St. Louis Americans, in the major league home run race.

The villagers crown around the town drug store each afternoon to watch the scores and home run records. Although Hornsby is one under Williams the fans here express confidence in their hero's ability to win out.

President Ebbets of the Dodgers has confirmed the report that he had fined Burleigh Grimes and suspended him indefinitely. The punishment is the result of Burleigh's behavior in a recent game against the Reds. Grimes got peeved at his teammates and then engaged in a verbal battle with Manager Robinson when Robbie took him out.

He was for many years president of the New Bedford Driving Club.

Somerville is expected to turn out as a unit when the Lincolns and Civics clash in the second game of the series at Lincoln Park. Both teams are evenly matched and each has plenty of supporters who will make their presence felt.

The Civics captured the first game, but since it was a real scrap and as someone had to win, little of the local enthusiasm has died out. The Lincolns are confident of evening up the series while the Civics are telling their friends that it will be all over after tomorrow night.

Stuart has been sent to the Stars by Branch Rickey of the Cardinals and Branch thinks so well of him that he says he will be one of the best pitchers in the big show inside of two years.

Stuart pitched yesterday against Jersey City and won 6 to 4 holding the Skeeters to five hits.

Desert Love

By Joan Conquest

She trusted herself with a Sheik in the lonely desert—

WOULD YOU?

Jill Carden, a beautiful and daring young English girl, brought up in a conventional home, burns her bridges behind her and lives in an oasis, far from her own race, for the love of an Arab chief. She was seventeen, motherless and much sought after by reason of her great wealth, which, however, disappeared when her father's will was read. After getting a position as traveling companion she finds herself at Suez. She gets her first glimpse of Hahmed, the Camel King, and tosses a coin to decide whether she shall speak to him or go back to England. It falls heads and she is committed to the Sheik and the desert.

THE end came in a positive Catherine-wheel exhibition of posturing and a deathly silence on the part of the audience; the men not caring to make any comment, the women not daring to look at each other, until the widow, suddenly seizing upon the situation, clapped her little hands roguishly and avowed in a babyish voice that "C'etait bien gentil et original, n'est ce pas," which she didn't think at all really.

Anyway her opinion served as a break, so that on the exit of the dancers in single file, which was tenfold more trying to the spectators than their entry, with stretching of cramped limbs and stereotyped utterances such as how very Eastern," "so unexpected," the entire party rose to their feet, the dragoman holding a hurried whispered conversation with the men, who each, and successively, and vehemently, shook their heads, leaving the women asking of themselves how in earth they were to continue existing relations with the men during the interminable weeks to Australia.

Jill, feeling almost faint from suppressed emotion and a revival of hunger, stood a little on one side watching them. An Eastern dancing house is a strange place in which to make the final decision of one's life, but in fact such a one she made here. She knew that she had only to make up the tale of a lost boat, and something would be done for her; in fact she could probably go as lady's maid to the Americans on their tour de monde, leaving overheard them complaining bitterly of their own French maid who had not been retrieved at Algiers. But her whole soul suddenly rising in mutiny against the stultifying civilization of it's West, she finally made up her mind to stay with the strangers until the hour came when she could slip out of the hotel where they were staying the night, into oriental liberty, and glamour, and unknown possibilities. So she sat next the marchese at dinner whose love-making was on exactly the same line as his clothes and having found out from the maid in the ladies' room just how to get to the end of the town in which was situated the Camel King s house, she waited for a desirable opportunity, and slipped out of the hotel on the pretence of looking at the stars, knowing that her unwitting hosts would think she had simply gone to bed.

Jill's memory being of the kind which retains only the pleasant word and act, the disagreeable episode of the afternoon had completely evacuated that cell which in one second can raise us through the bluest ether to the heaven as understood by the prayer-book or send us diving to the mud flats of the ocean bed to re-habit for a time with wingless and non-temperamental oddities.

Having stopped several times to discover by ear and eye if she was being followed from the hotel, and being satisfied that the sight of her dressing-case had in no way aroused the hall porter's curiosity, she propped her luggage against the base of a palm tree growing casually in the middle of a small street and proceeded to take her bearings

"Somehow it seemed quite easy to find when the maid was explaining," she communed to herself as she dug a hatpin afresh into her hat as is the way of woman when at a loss. "How stupid of me to try a short cut because it's distinctly said I was to go to the main street until I came to two mosques side by side, and then to turn sharply to the right. Oh well, I turned off too soon, and am lost—and I don't like these little streets—no! not one little bit! But that big red star dances right on a the house so I can but follow—here goes."

"I Advise You to Let Me Go at Once," Said Jill

She picked up her case, and then drew back quickly behind the tree as a white-robed figure slowly crossed the street, turned up another and disappeared.

"Oh, Moll and Jack, what on earth would you think if you knew I was now in Egypt! Alone! but free! Free at last, quite, quite free!"

And stretching out her arms on each side and giving herself a little shake, Jill laughed ever so softly in pure exuberance of that feeling of freedom, which seems to make an air pocket about your and in the middle of which you float contentedly, oblivious of the winds raging on the outside.

So glancing up at the red star never once did her life had it failed her, and though to her all Eastern men seemed exactly alike in the moonlight, yet her inner consciousness began to tap her out a message of warning, and the bristles of her self-protection to rise at the threatening of danger.

"Rather!" however, was her only comment, as keeping the star ahead, she walked steadily onward

But she made a silent, strenuous, but unavailing struggle when something white and soft was slipped over her head and a hand placed firmly upon her mouth, as she felt herself lifted in a pair of strong arms and carried some considerable distance until she heard the click of a key, the opening and shutting of a door, and her captor's soft footfall through what seemed to be a deserted house.

She stood perfectly still when planted on her feet, and looked around her when the cloth had been removed from about her head.

White was her face indeed, but a little smile was twitching at one of her mouth as she noted the oriental luxury of the room in which she stood.

Ornate could hardly describe it so offensive was it in its richness, but it was magnificent in its barbaric splendor, and that I have thrown and cushions about or pastered with glittering sequins, bits of glass, and colored imitation jewels.

But scorn simply blazed in the great blue eyes as she stood in front of a man standing in front of the one and only door to the whole apartment

You brute!" she said undiplomatically and in French as he raised a few steps nearer and assumed deeply. "Why you're the man who followed me from the restaurant today! What do you want" Backsheesh! I haven't an so you had better let me go at once unless you want the police after you. You can't treat English women in this off hand way with impunity. I can assure you

Open the door immediately if you please"

Poor little Jill, who by involuntarily harking back to the insular belief that the veriest heathen will quake in unison with the British majesty at the mere threat of British law, showed the absolute yarborough she held in this game, the stakes of which she guessed were something more precious than life itself, and in which she held not a single winning card.

"Let not Madame cause herself worry," answered the oriental also in French, as he approached nearer still, his eyes ablaze with passion of sorts as he looked the girl up and down from head to foot "The police—the law—you are in Egypt, Madame, or I should say Mademoiselle I think. Money! when a man holds heaven itself with his grasp, does he open his hand to grasp a passing gnat?

"I shall advise you to let me go at once," repeated Jill, "if you don't want my friends to raise trouble."

But to all of was of no avail as she was seized quite roughly in the arms of the man who stood with a kind of contempt in the action.

"Let Madame not pass but now run away from her friends, he—he—he, but let us have very little more fun" and nowhere to go and no friends at that I have thrown and cushions about or pastered with glittering sequins, bits of glass, and colored imitation jewels.

But scorn simply blazed in the great blue eyes as she stood in front of a man standing in front of the one and only door to the whole apartment

So glancing up at the red star never once did her life had it and once more picking up her bag, she too crossed the street and disappeared up a narrower one halting for a moment at the sight of a man standing with bent head in the attitude of prayer and the beads of Allah hanging from the hands crossed upon the breast

Be Careful What You Wash Your Child's Hair With "Use Mulsified"

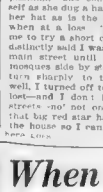
If you want to keep your child's hair in good condition, be careful what you wash it with

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and is very harmful. Mulsified coconut oil shampoo (which is pure and creamy greaseless), is much better than anything else you can use for shampooing as this can't possibly injure the hair.

Simply put two or three teaspoonfuls of Mulsified in a cup or glass with a little warm water, then moisten the hair with water and rub it in. It will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather, and cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly. The lather rinses out easily, and removes every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excess oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and leaves it fine and silky, bright, fluffy and wavy.

You can get Mulsified coconut oil shampoo at any drug store. It is very cheap, and a few ounces is enough to last everyone in the family for months. Be sure your druggist gives you Mulsified.

When a Girl Marries—A Serial by Ann Lisle



(She Is Endeavoring to Help)

I HAD no opportunity to propose. Indeed I don't know what I could have said to Jim Warren about the man I trusted—kept where known are only—and deserved.

In some strange way the shadow of Jim's trouble fell like a curtain upon my growing friendship with him.

Mr. Bladane and Irma brought me home from our impromptu dinner early enough to insure me a good night's sleep. But I didn't get it. For I'd hardly crept into bed and pulled the covers over my weary head when there came a little tap-tapping at the door. I got up and pattered across the room to admit Carlotta.

"Hello, dear" she exclaimed "I wouldn't have disturbed you, but I knew you hadn't gone to sleep by, for I saw your lights go out just as we drove up. Something I come in? And am I welcome"

"Both" I insisted cordially "Come in and curl up on the bed. Or no—" I added, noticing that she wore the exquisite green and orchid chiffon which brought her so many compliments the night of our dinner party to Phoebe and Neal and Tony. "I'll come in with you while you get into a kimona and take down your hair. Then when you're all comfortable you can come in to visit me."

"You blessed lamb" cried Carlotta. "It's just like you to think of all that. Most women won't let me take a chance with my pretties for—or my comfort."

"Don't malign our sex" I cried, accompanying her across the hall.

While she was making herself ready, we chatted of little nothings as the way folks have when there's something big they want to say—and can't bring themselves to put it into words until the environment is just right.

There was a subdued excitement about Carlotta's every move. And daily she turned toward me with her arms raised to her half-loosened hair—a posture was exquisite—lacking feminine. Her whole heart seemed in tune to happy thoughts.

At last she cried, "I'm ready now to talk to you, dear. I was a fool yesterday. I wonder do you think you could ever forgive me"

"Why no" I demanded, surprised and gladly. "You're young and you were full of all the world knows you have real heart. Any man, could care for you. You take as it stands—such a man one man in all the world."

"That man is not ready to me," said Carlotta simply. "Tony is my man. The only man for me. I'm not afraid to say it. I see of all and I afraid to say it to you. You know how it is. You're that way about Jim."

"Yes, I'm that way about Jim." I agreed. "Jim is my Then don't see any other"

"No, a love doesn't cut you off from loving other men—from loving friends with them I mean, persisted Carlotta. "I can't imagine anything coming between you and my liking for Pat. We were pals when we needed each other. We are friends now that we have found each other at all. Virginia wasn't right. She likes to play just me for he pins Pat over a rough place—just as you like the little Cordova woman, seems so—ready to the rest of us."

"Why do you make that comparison?" I demanded.

"Because you and I are sort of parallel," replied Carlotta, dismissing Rosa with that single word. "Each of us has to—slay a dragon to get her man. I've Tony's pride to conquer. You have Jim's business problems — Dick West, to put it in concrete terms. And I've been thinking that while you're waiting for Jim to come back, you ought to have some one to lean on—to count on and talk things over with—the way I do with Pat. In your business, I mean."

"Say it, Carlotta" I commanded.

"Say what"

"What's on your mind, you generous girl! You're still wondering if you may be taking from me any part of Tony's friendship. No, dear—you're not. Tony gave me the big help I needed. He saw me through my money panic. You aren't taking the friendship from me. Indeed not! Tony and you

"Say it, Carlotta" I commanded.

"Say what"

"What's on your mind, you generous girl! You're still wondering if you may be taking from me any part of Tony's friendship. No, dear—you're not. Tony gave me the big help I needed. He saw me through my money panic. You aren't taking the friendship from me. Indeed not! Tony and you thought of me and meant to take me with you then and there. All of Tony's friends that I met—and I've taken—from Tony, in spite of his wife's dislike for me. I might fail Tony's friendship, or Pat's, or Jim's."

"What do you mean" demanded Carlotta

"That a man's devotion to his husband is, by some laws, to be considered. I said exactly the kind of friendship for Jim to with the consent or approval of That you have to—I instructed as putting the cart before the horse. The man's approval every woman needs."

I faltered, scared that I had said much. Was fighting to Carlotta that Arizona Norton was the one man of all. Jim Ford always been jealous. I'd given her to understand that the room was means to Tony. The more my friendship for Lois Norton express itself Carlotta would become jealous.

"I see," she said slowly. "You're so unselfish that you'd think I was doing you a favor even if I were sorbed every moment of Tony's time—as I might be selfish, I suppose, to try to do I'm so happy. I feel so carefree. I think he—almost knows it too. He'll tell me soon. But if I ever had anything more from life, I'd be grateful for this evening. It was so sweet."

"You blessed dear," murmured through a throat that didn't want to open and let out the words. "I want you to be happy. There's nothing I want more."

I won't have to be too. You will soon again—all of Carlotta's thoughts of no-one other than herself—are of Bradstreet. When she was on tiptoe ready to reach her star. Then will one of her abrupt and almost magical changes of mood and she-devil. I was forgetting the main point I made in this session I was coming to ask you to spend Thanksgiving with me. Jim's mother and sister have said I was welcome. Will you? Say you'll come and help me keep Jim's mother from worrying about me. Please say you'll come and I'll be so happy."

"And you little fool you! of a fellow you'll never see I'll never see you again. Good night and sweet dreams, dear."

Landru—His Secret Love Affairs

First Authentic Story of French Bluebeard, Who Won 283 Women, Written By William Le Queux

NOW the morning of April 5th dawned brightly—a true Spring morning—and Madame Pascal, after their cafe au lait, which she herself prepared, suggested a walk into Houdan, that being the nearest town.

She and Landru went. The road is broad and tree-lined, and runs first to the little hamlet of, Maulette, and then on in the little place at Houdan—one of the most antique little towns in France—where they took coffee at the little Cafe de Commerce, a small place, with a billiard-table in the centre, as is usual in country towns in France.

They arrived back on that glorious morning, with the birds singing over the fields, and, over and anon, a motor-car flashed past them on the broad, well-kept, high road. Out there they were far away from the stress of war, and the innocent victim, though rather tired after her long trudge, was more deeply in love than ever with the man who in his parrot fashion—though, of course, she did not realize it—quoted verses from poet after poet.

His occupation was a somewhat curious one. He had taken a bottle of red wine from the cellar, and, uncorking it, he placed into it thirty drops of a dark brown liquid from a little bottle which he had taken from a locker cupboard in his bedroom—a cupboard in which was hidden a book entitled "Great Poisoners of the Past," and which, by the way, was later on produced in the Assize Court at Versailles.

Having introduced the drops, all carefully counted as a chemist would count them, he shook the wine well, replaced the cork, and succeeded in carrying it into the dining-room and placing it upon the buffet while his fiances was busy in the kitchen. Then he went to the cellar, and obtained a bottle of white wine of Anjour, of which he was inordinately fond, and always took at restaurants wherever he could get it. This he uncorked, and placed beside the red wine he had prepared for his victim.

"They sat down to their luncheon, which the frugal Madame Pascal had bought in Houdan and carried home.

"Take some of this, dearest," said her bearded lover, passing over the red wine. "I shall try my vin d'Anjou."

"You always like that wine; I don't. It's too tart for me," she said.

She poured herself out a glass of the red wine, while Landru, with his big, sleepy eyes, watched her.

A few moments later, over the cutlet which she had cooked, she drank half the glass, declaring it to be excellent.

Presently, as she rose to change the plates, she gasped:

"Oh! I feel so dizzy! Is it that wine? I have not taken a glassful I—oh, my throat! It's burning—burning as though I am poisoned!"

"How silly you are, dearest!" laughed the great lover. "Surely it is imagination?"

And he took a cigarette from the box at his elbow, and lazily lit it, while he watched her with curiosity—well knowing that the end was near.

Away in Paris in that little flat in the Rue Rochechouart was his one and only love, the dainty, fair-haired Fernande Segret. He was eager to get back to her.

And indeed he did so, for Madame Pascal, after enduring the most terrible tortures of the stomach, and imploring Landru to call a doctor—at which he laughed in her face—died at a quarter past five that afternoon. Yet at half past nine o'clock that same evening, the great lover was back in Paris with his latest lady-love, and after telling her a story of his journey to Nantes, he took her out to supper!

Meanwhile, the dismembered body of the poor dressmaker, in three weighted sacks, lay hidden in the depths of the Seine river, some twenty kilometres from Gambais, at a lonely spot where the road runs close to the bank, between the villages of Chaurcent and the Forest of Chandon. All Madame Pascal's clothes and her hat he destroyed in the kitchen stove before leaving, being careful to collect the buttons, hooks, and steels of her corsets, which he placed in one of the sacks after his gruesome task.

Though the river was, later on, dragged for many kilometres, the remains have never been recovered.

The sum old Caillard gave the great assassin for the furniture in the Rue Signdhal was, in English money, under seventeen pounds!

From that fatal day in April, 1915, #Bluebeard# lived happily at 76, Rue Rochechouart, with Mlle. Jamoiselle as his companion. He was always polite and charming towards her, and frequently went to Gambais, where, of course, all the evidence of his latest terrible crime had been carefully obliterated. But he was often absent "on business," as he declared, for many days at a time. Sometimes he went to attend to his motor business—then the selling of stolen cars, from which he was now deriving a small and unstable income. He had joined a gang of motor-car thieves—an offshoot of the blackmailers of whom the elegant Bialsot was the head—and for some months he prospered, and spent upon his latest fiances all the money he secured by his criminal "deals." At his garage, cars were disguised, engine numbers altered, and various means taken to obliterate their identity.

This continued until the middle of December, when Landru, in the course of his pretended occupation as a dealer, met a Mademoiselle Marchadier, a rather good-looking woman, aged thirty-seven, who was a gay little landlady, who let rooms in the Rue St. Jacques. She was about to give up her house, she told him, and she desired to sell her furniture. Now the lady in question had been of the demi-monde, and had recently taken rooms and established a pension. This, however, did not pay and she had resolved to sell up and return to her old life.

Under the name of Moret, she had approached a man for the sale of her furniture, and Landru went to Gambais, where, of course, all the evidence of his latest terrible crime had been carefully obliterated. THE STORY SO FAR

Landru's early life is described by M. Le Queux in the opening chapter of his story of the world's greatest love criminal. After years of petty swindling he turned his attention to victimizing women, making love to them, getting control of their property, and then killing them. Mme. Cuchet was the first. Landru poisoned her and her son Andre in a villa rented with her money and burned their bodies in a furnace. He then made love to Mme. Labord-Line. Meanwhile the police investigated his activities at the villa and he shrewdly played for time, going to Lyons and notifying them he would have to be gone a week or more. Meanwhile he made love to several other women, including Nina Langlois, to whom he wrote affectionately and got her to sign over her money. His affair with Elise Laporte followed. Next he killed Mme. Heon. Andree Babelay, a pawnshopgirl, fell into his clutches and died. Mme. Buisson and Mme. Jaume followed. The police net was now drawing close around the arch fiend.

The Loves, Tragedies and Triumphs of a Boston Business Girl

"MARY" By ELENORE MEHERIN

Poor Mademoiselle Marchadier did not live long to enjoy the delights of "The Hermitage." In her purse she had the two thousand francs which her lover had given her for her furniture, but the arch-assassin was sadly in need of that money. Indeed, without it he could not return to his adored fiancee, the pretty Fernande, who was patiently awaiting him—the one woman who went to Gambais and returned—the one of all the many who went there, some of whom we do not know. The entrance door of that villa, with its wrought-ironwork, could unfold many terrible tales, as could that little rose-garden.

Only for two hours did his victim suffer for pet dogs remain alive after they had entered the "House of Death."

Landru had brought a picnic lunch, consisting of some meat, salad, bread and a camembert cheese from Paris.

"I will cut this cheese, dearest, just to have a makeshift lunch," he said. "Afterwards we will go to the village and get our supplies. They will serve as a meal," he added before they started. "Later, my dear old servant, Madame Roland, will be there, and she will see that you are comfortable, and will order everything. She is a dear old soul—one of the old-fashioned type from the Seine-et-Oise. You will become very fond of her, I know."

As a matter of fact, no such person existed!

Landru was, after all, a perfect artist in crime, although, as I have said, he only gained paltry sous by his deals in human life. He always played for small stakes, and was in the hands of others (like Bialsot, who made thousands upon thousands of francs by their crimes. He was never affluent—always hard-up—hence, always on the quit vive for any "dove"—as he called women—to devour.

This good-looking woman with a past, who by establishing a pension had endeavored to cut adrift from the night life of Paris, sat down to the late dejeuner—just the cold viands, cheese, and fruit Landru had brought.

They ate their meal in that dining-room in which other women had fallen dead. Landru passed to his victim a box of sardines, which he had himself opened in the kitchen, as hors d'oeuvres. His latest fiancee took two, but he himself preferred a slice of cold sausage.

Those sardines, which she ate with such relish, quickly took effect, for ere they reached the few apples and dried fruits which Landru had brought as dessert, the poor woman had a sudden seizure and collapsed over the table.

Within two hours of the deluded woman's entrance to "The Hermitage," she had breathed her last upon the floor of the salle-a-manger.

The three dogs at once started to bark in alarm around her body, and Landru's first action was to silence them. He took a piece of meat from the table, and sprinkled upon it some of the same poison which he had introduced into the box of sardines, and the three terrified dogs were silent and stretched out in death.

Indeed, though no trace of Mademoiselle Marchadier has been found by the police, the skeletons of the three little dogs, together with that of the unsuspecting lady were eventually found when the concrete floor of an outhouse at "The Hermitage" was torn up, an operation at which I myself was present, and in which I assisted.

At eight o'clock that night it was very dark and raining in torrents when Landru got again to his ghoulish work. He burned the poor woman's clothes in the kitchen stove as he had done those of Madame Pascal and others, and from her silk handbag took out the two thousand francs in notes which he had paid her. Afterwards he threw the bag into the burning coals—those coals they had brought with them from Houdan!

Then, just after midnight, he wrapped the nude, bent-up body in a big travelling-rug and placed it in a stolen motor-car which he had driven down there three days before for the purpose.

RADIO INTERPHONE

THE latest development in the use of radiophone for communication between airplanes and the ground is an interphone, designed by the Signal Corps of the United States Army. This interphone enables the pilot and observer to speak to each other while in the air, as well as enabling either one to talk with an operator on the ground.

The change from radiophone to interphone communication is effected by means of a switch, which automatically permits conversation between pilot and observer in one position, and throws in the circuit for radiophone communication in the other.

Another feature of the interphone is a "side-tone" circuit, which includes a condenser which feeds back some of the current from either transmitter to the receiver with it. This enables the person talking to hear his own voice as he speaks, so that he can regulate the volume of it, and at the same time know that the set is in working order. The necessity of this is obvious when it is understood that the sound-proof helmets which the pilots and observers wear completely deafen them to the sound of their own voice except when some such provision is made.

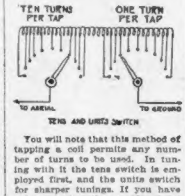
The best type of antenna for airplane has been found to be simply a trailing wire of the proper length, at the same time using the plane's guys and wires as a counterpoise. The trailing antenna is wound on a reel, and by means of a special weight and release, is unwound at the proper time. A device is also made for breaking the line in case it becomes snarled with an obstruction.

Signal Corps experts are now working on a method of enabling aviators to find their way to the landing field in heavy fog or at night. By means of a pair of horizontal coils ingeniously arranged on the plane, it was found that radio signals from the landing field could be localized, and a safe landing made in the blackest darkness.

Still another safety-aid is in the broadcasting of weather conditions for the use of aviators from a network of stations. Such a system is aimed to prevent such a disaster as occurred at Morgantown, Maryland, when seven lives were lost from an airplane because of an unexpected storm. These weather broadcasting stations are being erected at Mitchell Field, Long Island, New York; Langley Field, Virginia; Moundsville, West Virginia, and Fairfields, Ohio.

Answers to Radio Fans

J. F. O., Lowell.—Your coil is apparently tapped for a tens and units switch, and the taps should be connected as shown in the diagram.



You will note that this method of tapping a coil permits any number of turns to be used. In tuning with it the tens switch is employed first, and the units switch for sharper tunings. If you have only a single coil, one side of the secondary should be connected to the aerial lead, and the other side to the ground lead.

F. A. R., Framingham.—A tin roof, if it is not grounded, should not cause you any trouble in receiving an aerial. Simply make sure that no part of the aerial or leading in comes in electrical contact with the metal.

L. J., Boston.—The rating of a storage battery merely gives the approximate time it will last if one ampere is being drawn off. An 80-ampere-hour battery will furnish two amperes for forty hours, etc. If you use more than one tube, the larger batteries are better, although they are some what heavier. There is no satisfactory substitute yet.

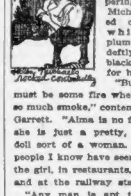
DAILY SHORT STORY—Jests at Scars

By Maria Luttrell

"I THINK that it is absurd for Alma to carry on so about Max. After all, nothing has been proven. All she knows is what the idle gossips and scandal mongers are whispering." Helen Michaels rocked contentedly while her plump fingers deftly knitted a black silk tie for Jim.



"But there must be some fire where there is so much smoke," contended Louise Garrett. "Alma is no fool even if she is just a pretty, dressed-up doll sort of a woman. A dozen people I know have seen Max with the girl, in restaurants, in his car and at the railway station."

"Any man is apt to be seen having a meal or two with his secretary. Likely, too, to give her a lift occasionally in his car."

"Well, explain the station incident!" challenged Louise. "Max and the girl left on the same train. He told Alma that he was called out of town on a case and would stop by his mother's on the way home to spend the week-end. So when Alma fell getting out of her car, and broke her arm, she wired him at his mother's and he had never even been there. Where was he then, pray?"

"I'm glad that I'm not the sort of person to go around looking for evil in those I pretend to love. I'm sorry for Alma, of course, but when a couple run their marital bark on the rocks I always think that both pairs of hands have had something to do with the sailing of it."

"You're old-fashioned," chided Louise hotly. "The modern woman does not blame everything on her unfortunate sister. She believes, and she's usually right, that nine times out of ten it's the fault of the man when things go wrong."

"Well, we both know that Alma has done nothing to hold Max's love since they were married."

"There's one thing certain," Helen thoughtfully pushed her needle through the ball of silk. "If I were in Alma's place I'd try to be dignified about the whole thing. I'd never howl and rage and tell intimate things about my past life with my husband. I'd never willingly make our life together a matter of jest for the public. I tell you, Louise, if Alma had made a real home for Mac, if she had laid out his clothes and cooked little things that he especially liked, there would never have been any of this row.

"All men are alike. Keep them comfortable and well fed and you'll never have any domestic triangles. Look at Jim! Doesn't he tell me over and over again what a good wife I am and how little he deserves me. It pays to keep a man humble."

"You're dead wrong, trying to solve all problems with the same mathematical rules." Louise looked up at a photograph of Jim Michaels, he of the coal black hair and waving, laughing eyes, unmistakably holding the come-hither look of a roving male. So far so good. He had been clever to keep Helen so happy.

The telephone rang and Helen answered laughingly, telling Jim that he was missing a treat that night—Louise was there to stay for dinner, about Alma."

"Now, why don't I get on my ear and rush to his office and snoop around to find out whether or not he is having dinner with a client from Detroit? I didn't even ask him whether the client was male or female. So he told me, like a fool, by telling his mother all about it. Big automobile dealer—it may mean a car for me! If you ever marry, old dear, you'll learn that if you trust a man he'll always be true. Watch him, and he'll turn out a sneak!"

"You needn't give me advice. I'm the cat that walked alone."

"We'll have dinner right away so that Jim can go home early. We're going to have frozen pear salad with cottage cheese. That's Jim's favorite in hot weather."

An hour later when the telephone rang, Louise happened to be near it, so she answered. Dick Peters, Jim's partner, was calling. "Is that Mrs. Jim Michaels?" he asked rather breathlessly.

"No, it's Louise, Dick. Want to speak to Helen?"

"Thank God, you're there when you're so much needed. Listen! Keep smiling, don't let on to Helen that anything's wrong. Then use your own judgment—women know more about such things than men. Jim's hurt—just scratched and bruised and shocked; but the girl who was with him is dying. Nasty spill near Gorham's roadhouse. He's here at the hospital—all broken up over the girl."

"Yes, and what else, Dick?" Louise put up her right hand to keep Helen from seeing how her left one was shaking as she held the receiver to her startled ear.

"Let Dick come over to take you home, dear," Helen interrupted. "We can have a game of cards and a bite of cold supper when Jim comes in."

"His secretary, you know, same one" went on Dick's voice. "Nice little kid until Jim got hold of her. Tell Helen enough to prepare her! It'll all be in the papers—that clean-up campaign has ruined the press here—simply can't kill the story. I've tried. It'll be home with Jim when he leaves her. Say, you might as well tell Helen everything you know. She's bound to find out—now."

It was just like a dramatic twist to a story, thought Louise, wondering what to say first. She had known about Jim and the girl for a long time. And now he had been others, too. Of course, Helen would create a terrible scene, probably go all to pieces. Intolerant people always did.

She crossed the room, Helen's big eyes fixed blankly on her. That sixth sense common to women already preparing her for something tragic.

"It's about Jim, I know!" Her face was white, lined, suddenly old.

Louise sat down beside her, put her arms around her. "Helen, you must try to remember what you have just said about an abused wife, about Alma." Then she haltingly began her story. She was frightened at Helen's calmness, at the frozen look that had crept over her face. She had not dreamed that any woman could live up to what she required of another woman under the same tragic circumstances.

Helen put up her hand and pushed back the damp hair from her forehead. Then she must help me pack up some clothes before Jim comes home." Her chin was trembling, despite her wonderful calm. "I've been getting ready for this for eight long years. I knew it was inevitable. I've had to keep myself from thinking I know—anything. Lied to myself my own pride. I thought I would suffer so when the real break came—but I'm only numb, as if I were freezing to death.

"I've tried desperately to hold him, tried to shame him into decency. All of you talked about the way I scrubbed this house—I worked to keep from going mad, He'll come to me every day, for a long time."

They were walking upstairs together, quite as if stark tragedy had not knifed one of them to death.

When they were ready to leave without a flicker of agony Helen crossed to the bed and turned down the sheets carefully and laid Jim's night things on the foot.

"That will make him suffer, too. To think that I remembered! He isn't really mean. Just wayward."

She pulled to the front door behind her and tried the doorknob with a housekeeper's instinctive sense of precaution. "He'll want me back some day," she told Louise as they signalled a passing taxi. Then she sank back against the cushions with a sigh of relief. Pretense was over at last.

MOVIE WORLD NEWS AND GOSSIP

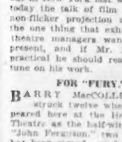
By FRIEDA DAVIS.

FLICKERLESS films at last! Samuel Eardy, a Philadelphia inventor, has been working quietly on this phase of the movies while the rest of the world was worrying over the question of talking movies. Mr. Eardy's idea seems, after all, to be the more important, for we can all get the story of a picture without hearing voices, but the flicker of films still causes many persons to keep away from the movies more than once a month or so.

Mr. Eardy's invention was tried out in New York last week and is today the talk of film circles. A non-flicker projection machine is the one thing that exhibitors and theatre managers want most at present, and if Mr. Eardy's is practical he should realize a fortune on his work.

FOR "FURY."

BARRY McCOLLUM, who struck Manhattan when he appeared here at the Hollis Street Theatre as the half-witted boy in "John Ferguson," two years ago, has been signed up for an important role in the next Richard Barthelmess picture, "Fury."



Richard Barthelmess

The Inspiration star is surrounding himself with good players and engaged a number, therefore, of exciting specialists. Dorothy Gish, as has been announced, will have the lead in the film, while Harry Hackemeyer, famous for his playing of the negro porter in "The Traveling Salesman," Ivan Linow, equine flasher and "heavy," Adolph Millar, noted fencing master, Pat Hartigan, and Pat Iersen Dial will also be "among these present."

JUSTINE JOHNSTON HEARD FROM

JUSTINE JOHNSTON'S fans, and their name is legion, have been sending in theatrics almost daily to find out what has become of their favorite. She has been in London for the past year with her husband, Walter Wanger, a former Dartmouth man, and has become the leading movie impresario of that city on the Thames.

Miss Johnston arrived in New York the latter part of last week for a visit with her mother in New Rochelle and returns to England within a few weeks. Her screen career, to all appearances, is a closed incident as far as she is concerned.

MIRIAM COOPER VISITING TOO.

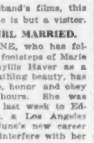
MIRIAM COOPER set sail for Hollywood the other day for Tahiti to keep an eye on her husband, Raoul Walsh, who is there directing a Goldwyn company in "Captain Blackbird," which has, by the way, been retitled "Passions of the Sea." The unusual feature of the affair is that Walsh usually Miss Cooper is seen as the lead in her husband's films, this time, though, she is but a visitor.

SENNETT GIRL MARRIED.

MILDRED JUNE, who has followed in the footsteps of Marie Prevost and Phyllis Haver as a Mack Sennett bathing beauty, has promised to love, honor and obey out of studio hours. She was quietly married last week to Edward H. Capps, a Los Angeles dentist. Miss June's new career will in no way interfere with her movie work.

ELINOR GLYN FILM.

ELINOR GLYN lets no grass grow beneath her fountain pen. She has found time during the past year to write two original stories for the Lasky company, has supervised the filming of them, has written a book, and now we find that she has written an original for Sol Lesser.



Elinor Glyn.

This particular production will be known as "All the World's a Stage," and will have such players to prove her confidence as Bruce McRae, last seen here in "The Gold Diggers," Dorothy Dalton, as the dependent star, Kenneth Harlan, and Otis Harlan. It will be an eight-reel feature, instead of the usual program length. Joseph Campbell will direct the story, which deals largely with Hollywood life, and should be that rarest of things, a winner as far as audiences are concerned.

LILLIAN GISH IN NEWPORT

JUST to prove that there's always room for a movie star on top, word comes from Newport that Lillian Gish has become the sensation of that fashionable watering place. She is there visiting Mr. and Mrs. Charles Duell, and has been lavishly showered with countless invitations to automobile parties, luncheons, teas, dinners, and supper parties. In fact, she has had such a good time there that her visit has been prolonged to take in all the parties given in her honor.

Bear Holds Up Ipswich Man in Yellowstone

Yellowstone Park, Aug. 14.—I. W. Appleton, wealthy Ipswich, Mass., resident, touring Dunraven Pass with Mrs. H. P. Whitney of New York; her son, C. V. Whitney; Mr. and Mrs. Roderick Tower of New York, Count Gaschiegel of Austria and Berkeley Wills of Denver, was held up by the famous "Black Bandit," a native black bear.

Waddling into the road, the "Bandit" forced the party to a halt and hand over, as he has successfully done a hundred times.

Although he scorns jewels and money, preferring sweets old bruin took a cigarette proffered him by the Count. He chewed for a second, then spat it out, disgustedly. But he enjoyed one of Mr. Tower's cigars.

Death Is Most Useful

We Leave the World When Our Minds Are Too Old, Too Much Hardened, to Accept New Thought

Copyright, 1922, Star Co.

What the little boy's sponge does for the slate, death, nature's sponge, does for the human race, wiping away minds too full of old ideas to receive any new ones.

The slate or the brain is not to be criticized because all the surface has been covered and there is no room for new things.

The brain, like the slate, starts out ready for all new impressions. Then comes crowding, and the sponge is needed.

You are reminded of death's useful worth often, when some very old man tells you what he thinks, especially what he thinks about harm done by new ideas.

Frederic Harrison, a noted English thinker and writer, celebrated his eighty-ninth birthday by telling the London Times that he was a "pessimist." Here are some of the things he said:

"Social improvement has not been gained without grave evils and cruel loss to good things and worthy persons. The tremendous upheaval, spiritually, morally and intellectually, has wrought incalculable mischief. The social betterment of labor has been won too often by violence, selfishness and greed, and usually by no cry but that of more money and bitter suspicion.

"The World War has changed everything and in the end has ruined much of good and of promise. The churches have not yet shown any power to restore religion to its true place as the guide of human life. The boom in education has not brought any nobler literature, any greater art, any purer drama, any finer manners. Serious literature is being choked out by the increasing cost of printing, the abolition of a leisured class able to study in peace and to produce from its learning, and by the mad whirl of modern existence.

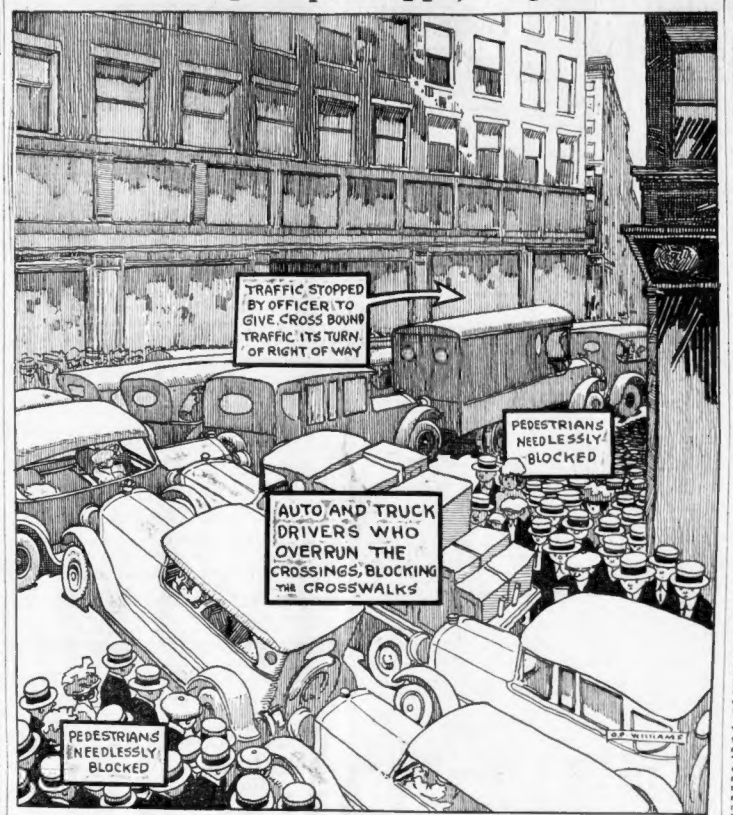
"The result of this chaos in spiritual and moral training is a manifest loosening of the canons of moral life, defiance of discipline by the young and ambitious mockery of age and all the lessons of age; worst of all, the sacrifice of the family as a moral institution and the degradation of marriage to be a temporary partnership entered into as a frivolous mode of getting a good time and to be cast off as easily as a lodging which is not convenient. . . . .

"I am a pessimist. This world is made of infinite complexity, and humanity has incalculable powers of recuperation; but the immediate future of this kingdom—nay, of Western civilization—is in real peril of collapse. The seizure of power by untold millions as yet neither morally nor intellectually trained to rule threatens revolutions, anarchy and famine.

"I have been all my life a resolute opponent not only of the accession of women to political responsibility, but of all forms of assimilation of women's activity to that of men. I adhere to everything I have ever said of this. Are women, now that they have equal votes, doing anything to check the service of the family, the degradation of marriage?

They now struggle to be barristers, to deluge the press with short stories, to thrust men from clerkships. The true task of woman is to moralize and spiritualize the world of man; to bear, train and humanize the coming generation."

Help! Capt. Hoppe, Help!



SEEN AND HEARD

DETECTIVE "BOB" CAVERLY, head of the "white squadron" formed by DISTRICT ATTORNEY THOMAS O'BRIEN to combat the dope evil, is a hearcat for work. Not content with working fourteen and sixteen hours a day, he devoted two whole days of his vacation period to work. He chanced to drop into Dr. Ruth's office and learned that the Federal dope forces were going out raiding, so he went.

On a Weymouth car, No. 1393, passengers lately were treated to an example of rare presence of mind. An elderly lady had alighted at New Downer's, leaving her black handbag and pocketbook where she had been seated. The car had started and gained some headway, when a young man discovered the nearly lost articles. Without hesitation he jammed the pocketbook inside the bag and hurled both through an open window. "Here they are, lady!" he shouted cheerfully, while other passengers grinned.

With interest at fever heat in the coming September primaries, evidence of just as interesting fights is seen in the campaign for City Council and School Committee seats next December. Dr. Charles Mackey of Broadway, South Boston, is considering entering the School Committee fight. Captain Paul Hines of the Peninsular District already has the pole in the City Council race.

FRANCIS X. SHEEHAN of Dorchester will shortly abandon a "hike" in the Vermont hills to take part in the September primary fight. He is a candidate of the Democratic State Committee from the Seventh Senatorial District.

REMEMBER: When you were a kid in the bleachers and always warwhooped at the Indian ball player? And when you showed the other kids your tongue to prove you'd had huckleberry pie?

CAPTAIN DAVID J. BRICKLEY, president of the City Council, has collected 23,000 names of persons who have pledged themselves to vote for him on election day in his fight against Congressman George Holden Tinkham. "I'll be the next Congressman from the Eleventh District," says Dave.

INSPECTOR CHARLES J. VOELKER ("DUTCH"), aid to Dr. Ruth's Federal narcotic squad, needed a new holster for his heavyweight cannon. So he did. Instead of buying one, he got some leather and made one. When friends marvelled at the fine fancy workmanship of the revolver case, "Dutch" solved the problem by explaining that he used to be a saddler in the army.

GARRETT P. SERVISS ON MASTER OF FATE

By Garrett P. Serviss

IF you are laying in tonics for the mind, in preparation for work and decisions that await you, by no means neglect to get John Foster's "Essay on Decision of Character." This little masterpiece must be nearly a century old now, but it is a star in the firmament of useful literature that should never be permitted to set. There ought to be a good pocket edition of it, and perhaps there is one, but the only place where I am sure that you can find the essay is in one of the volumes of Foster's works contained in the old "Bohn library."

In my college days Andrew D. White published a pamphlet edition specially for the use of the students of Cornell University. The most weak-willed reader cannot but brace up and feel ashamed of his vacillation while reading that essay, and if he has any underlying soundness of character the reading will tend to bring it out and put it into play.

The greatest service that psychology can render is to show men how to conduct their lives so that each shall attain his highest possibility for usefulness to his fellow men, for that is the only true efficiency and the only source of real happiness. Without decision of character there can be no efficiency and no happiness. Decision is the driving force of concentration, which is the auger that bores the hole through to success.

What is said above about the relation of decision of character to happiness cannot be over emphasized. Foster will picture to you the self-contempt that rises from inability to decide and to choose definitely a course of action, but a student and reader of character once made the thing rise like a monstrous portent before me by a single sentence:

"Young man, if you cannot make up your mind God has not use for you!"

We often read that events shape themselves to the wish of the man of strong will and declare a mental grasp, but many take this to be a mere figure of speech intended to encourage the weaker brethren to make at least an effort. But it is no figure of speech; it is a statement of fact.

A man can shape events amazingly by firmly setting his course among them. I have sometimes wondered whether this is not the real meaning underlying the enigmatical words of Christ, which He more than once repeated, about the Illimitable power of faith. Faith and will—are they not identical in nature? May they not represent a form of energy, not catalogued by physical science? This is not spiritism, though it may be metaphysics.

But without going beyond the range of accepted scientific facts and doctrines, it is not difficult to explain how a decisive character may shape thing to his will. The virtually infinite variety and variability of circumstances furnish the groundwork. The doctrine of evolution is based on the essential mutability underlying all nature. By selection, natural or artificial (i. e., man-made), among the tendencies of nature to vary, the course of things can be changed, and the more subject to variation than the tendencies of the human mind. Add to this the element of strong, decided character may turn the current of habit, custom or preference in such cases what is foreseen is brought about, the event proves to be the offspring of the will, and volition become creation.

It is a mistake to think that there is only one right decision to be made in a case of doubt. There may be many varying decisions, any one of which, if properly followed up,

The Voice of New England

Sad Awakening

Editor Boston American:

As a constant reader of the Boston American and particularly your worthy column, "The Voice of New England," I find the latest discussion to be centred on a certain girl evangelist. It is surprising how many side in with her and praise her, Sophie, I suppose, that heaven is the reward in her teachings. Sad awakening some people are coming to. Not very long ago these same people would have said, "Children should be seen and not heard." Personally, I think Mr. John G. Barry is quite right when he says she should be on a "nut" farm.

"Greene Bubble"

Editor Boston American:

Being a constant reader of your paper, I noted several times the way you are exposing that "Greene bubble," as you have termed it. Now, in behalf of the several Manchester, N. H., men that represented the "Greene bubble," including myself, I wish to impress upon the mind of the editor of that "Greene" story that we were all honest. We had heart and soul in the H. V. Greene Co. Your paper stated that we were "silver-tongued orators, the best in the land." The majority of the Manchester salesmen that represented the Greene Co., were "green" about selling, and the banker that said in your paper "99 per cent salesmanship," is a poor judge on salesmanship, in my opinion. The people, the stockholders, who purchased stock in the Greene enterprises, bought mostly because of the merits of the proposition and not because the salesmen were, as you have called them, the cream of the land. I wish for the moral benefit of those connected with the Greene enterprise in New Hampshire, especially the former salesmen, that you will print this in your columns.

ARTHUR HERING.

Former acting manager of the Manchester, N. H., branch of the H. V. Greene Co.

Needs Life Guards

Editor Boston American:

I have noticed that they are putting a ban on automobile bath houses at Old Orchard. I should think they would pay a little more attention to the safety of the bathers at Old Orchard Instead of finding fault with the bath houses the bathers are using.

There is hardly a day goes by but someone is taken from the surf at the point of drowning. They boast about only one drowning accident this season, but it is no credit to the town of Old Orchard, as there has been many narrow escapes, and there isn't a life guard on the beach.

A SUMMER RESIDENT.

Band of Outlaws

Editor Boston American:

The general public is much more easily deceived than educated and there has never been an institution so completely built upon deception and fraud as the movies. I should like to know if you are really trying to set Hays right on that Arbuckle matter or if you are only giving your readers a little excitement. All through Arbuckle's trouble people have been saying, "Oh, he will get back all right," and they are still saying it, but Arbuckle isn't back and that ban has hurt him more than everything else put together. There isn't one thing to justify its existence.

The idea of jumping on Arbuckle and passing everybody else in that world of bad pictures and scandals. He has really given the public good pictures and he has paid for his scandal. He is more nearly square than any of them.

Hays and the people who let him put a ban on Arbuckle after the jury verdict are a band of outlaws.

VERITAS.

Knock Is a Boost

Editor Boston American:

Can you tell me why politicians spend so much time knocking opponents? In my profession, selling, we know that every knock is a boost. We never knock. If a competitor knocks we know he is helping us and we encourage him to talk. We do not care much what he says if he but talks.

If politicians would inject some SELLING-ETHICS into their work of selling themselves to the voters, some of us might be tempted to cast our first vote out of pure admiration.

BIG ACHIEVEMENTS THOSE OF "COMMON" MEN IN HISTORY

By Winifred Black

"I AM not very much interested in them," said the young woman who is studying journalism. "They are such awfully common people—so poor and so dull, and they lead such sordid lives. Curl papers in the morning, don't you know, and cheap cotton kimonos, and such shocking bad hats when they do go out! Oh, yes, I know they're human and all that, but common people just bore me to death, and that's all there is to it."

And she thinks she's going to be a successful journalist and some day a great writer. Poor girl, how much she has to learn!

"Common?" Well, I suppose they are common, the girls in the little family that is in such deep trouble.

But they seem to be quite as unhappy and heartbroken as if they were the most uncommon creatures in the world.

I think if I were the young lady who is studying journalism I would change my mind about common people. I'm afraid she won't get very far if she doesn't. In the first place, there are such a lot of common people in the world, and so very few uncommon ones.

Birth and death, and love and disappointment, and hope and trust, and poverty and failure—how very common they all are.

Besides if she would only stop to think of it, if you left out the common people, how many great plays or great novels would you have?

Oh, yes, there's a king or two in the plays, once in a while, but they are always there just for a background and stupid—talk about being bored, whenever the king comes in, you might as well shut your eyes and begin to think about the new hat you are going to have and whether the lining shall be blue or old rose.

And as for the books, if we had no common people in the books we'd have to burn our libraries and be done with it.

Who lives the longest in your memory—Lady Clare Vere de Vere or Maud Muller, who was out in the dew early in the morning in quite the commonest sort of way?

Mrs. Mulcahy—she cleans the office after the clerks are gone. If you could know Mrs. Mulcahy's life and the ups and downs in it and knew enough to tell it as it really is, you'd be famous the day after your story was published.

Common people? I'm afraid I like them better than I do the uncommon people. I suppose it's because I must be very common myself.

DO YOU KNOW HOW TO REST?

Do you know how to rest and relax?

Do you know that the process of relaxation is necessary to rest?

Do you know how to "go to sleep" in your muscles and yet be awake to what goes on about you, enjoying it keenly?

When you have leisure, what do you do with it?

Do you sit awhile, then walk about, read a little, lie down ten minutes, read some more, and then begin to long for something to do which will keep you moving?

Or, to save thinking, do you just sleep the whole afternoon and get up as soggy and uninteresting as possible to yourself and all with whom you come in immediate contact?

In other words, you either work your tired system all the time, even when trying to rest, or you stagnate — hibernate — if cool enough.

In either case, you are on the wrong track.

Do not go home in a hurry so that you can get started at something else in a hurry, so that you can rest or recreate yourself in a hurry.

Energy must be balanced to be effective.

The secret of long, happy life is to know how to rest, how to eat, how to sleep, and how to think to the best advantage.

Medbury Says—

Nowadays When a Fellow Gets Married He Tries for a Girl Who Has a Home

There is a firm in town which we'll furnish the home."

This may be all right, but nowadays, when a fellow gets married he tries to get a girl who has a home.

Why should he buy a house when he can move into hers?

The only thing he does on his wedding day is to put the ring on her finger and have his trunk forwarded to her address.

The average groom doesn't care whether he's got the marriage license or not as long as he has the claim checks for his baggage.

He could dig up another girl easy enough, but it's darn hard to locate a lost trunk.

Some guys get married right in the girl's house.

They're afraid they might have a quarrel on the way from the church and have to move out of their new home before they move in.

It's not considered correct to show up too soon before the wedding. But a lot of men don't show up for a long time after it.

The average dame starts buying a home on time and then she marries you and keeps up the rest of the payments. Then, after the last instalment is made, she divorces you and gets a home for nothing.

One dame got married in a groceteria and divorced in a cafeteria. She helped herself to everything. When she got through with him all the husband left was the address.

All he had to keep was a memory, and then she hit him over the head and he lost that.

They had "Welcome" written on the door mat, and that was what caused all the trouble.

Her husband was too conceited. He thought it was meant for himself.

The only time he was welcome was on the 1st and 15th.

A woman used to swear to love her husband for the rest of her life.

Now she vows to love him from month to month.

But the women are more than fair when a girl sues for divorce.

She never takes any credit.

She wants property and cash.
